

ONE STRIKE WE'LL ALL APPROVE

AS AN ENGLISH WOMAN SEES UNITED STATES

Miss Maude Royden, London's well-known woman preacher, found many things to delight and inspire her in the United States, upon a recent visit, according to an article which she contributes to the September issue of the magazine "Our World." Miss Royden came to speak at the National Y. W. C. A. Convention at Hot Springs, Arkansas, where she created a deep impression on the great gathering of more than 2,000 women from all over the United States. She now gives for the first time publicly her impressions of the United States and its problems and responsibilities. Miss Royden writes:

"I had not been in America since the war, and I had not realized what a refreshment it would be to escape for a while from the war-stricken spirit of Europe. America gave her sons, too, in the war, and made her sacrifices. But here in England! To take one fact alone—there are between one and three-quarters and two millions more women than men in this country. The excess number has been nearly doubled by the war, and the men who have gone were, of course, the young. This creates not only a moral but an economic problem. "We shall win through; but can Americans realize what it feels like to come into a world so full of hope and courage as I found in the United States of America?" Of course, one's first impression always in America is of size and space. Even the deep chasms which represent streets in New York do not oppress one with any sense of confinement. It seems too cheerful and—what word can I use?—so cheery of your finding yourselves a little incommenced for space in Manhattan Island, to proceed to annex the sky. Instead of your great heights making me feel crowded up, they suggest limitless space. I delight in New York. There are few things in the world more beautiful than the stark outlines of your skyscrapers everywhere. But we were still in America! That made me realize the size of America a little.

"At Hot Springs I felt I had come into the midst of all your problems at once. The Young Women's Christian Association is up against industrial and immigration problems all the time; in Arkansas it was very specially up against the color problem. It is a vast and heterogeneous organization (except as to sex) and has to face most of our human problems sooner or later, on your vast American scale. Well, I think it will be equal to its task. It has courage and leaders.

"The women I met in Hot Springs had every right to public esteem. It is true that I chiefly saw the leaders, and women like Mrs. Frederic M. Paist, Mrs. John French, Mrs. Robert E. Speer, Mrs. Mabel Cratty, and Miss Heclette. These would make their mark anywhere. But I met also some of their younger workers and of their rank and file members who were equally impressed. "I had heard a great deal, of course, of America's aloofness from the Old World and desired to 'test' herself to herself. For instance, a resolution committing the student members to a continuance of the policy of sending relief to their fellow-students in the most suffering areas of Europe was carried unanimously. So also was a resolution to 'outlaw war,' presented to the Convention. I imagine that the entry of America into the League of Nations, though it is far more discussed in the Eastern States than we Europeans have, here, would meet with increasing opposition as one went west; but it was profoundly cheering to know that there are many 'good Americans' who not only discuss but actively desire their country to share in the conventions and conferences that, whatever their immediate degree of success or failure, are slowly drawing the nations together. "I found in America, and above all in American women, a passion for the cause of peace, at white heat. This was a great inspiration. Americans may not like the League of Nations or approve any one particular form of organizing the world for peace; but peace they do want and want it with an intensity that will bring them—I believe—into such world politics as seem genuinely inspired by a desire to bring it about."
