Why President Harding Takes The Helm

"No more pitiable spectacle of complete legislative subservieny, of legislative trucking, of legislative crawling upon the belly at the feet of a master and licking the boots of authority" has ever been seen by Senator Reed, of Missouri, so he says, than is presented by the Republican Senate majority. However much the people may approve President Harding's decision to assume more and more of active leadership, the Democrats in Congress, reports one of the newspaper correspondents, have made up their mind that he is not to be allowed "to get away with it," at least until they have shown up Republican inconsistency. Both Senators and Congressmen have denounced recent attempts at what they call "personal rule."

President Harding's career as leader of his party really began with his address to the Senate which prevented the passage of the bonus bill, notes the Boston Transcript (Rep.). In this assuming active direction of the most important business before Congress, we read in the Brooklyn Eagle (Dem.), "He was but following Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson, who long ago discovered that the conception of the Presidency until recently held by Mr. Wilson on March 4th, writes the Washington correspondent of the Seattle Times (Ind.), "there were people who believed he was a political jellyfish." But, we read, "he has astonished the skeptics and delighted his friends by his boldness and initiative—first, in what he has done to insure a world conference on disarmament, and, secondly, in single-handedly tackling the bonus hornet's nest." "Let him take the helm!" cries the Boston Herald, one of the many Republican papers delighted to see the President taking the lead in the work of legislation.

The leading article in THE LITERARY DIGEST this week, August 6th, describes with a world of detail the President's action in assuming the leadership of his party, presenting as it does, public opinion from all sections of the country as represented by editorials in leading newspapers.
