A NEW FABRIC. The Mirror Velvet is Fit for a

Oueen. "Mirror" velvet is a new fabric which is halfway between satin and velvet. It has the softness and shadows of the one, and the sheen and brilliant surface of the other and incidentally, the price of both put to-gether. Ah me, are there not enough things to coax money out of our pockets as it is, without inventing more? Mirror vel-vet is used on gowns in the trousseaus of princesses, and then only in bands and stripes, but for just that reason some Am-srican women will have whole cloaks and arican women will have whole cloaks and sven wrappers made of it.

Skirts are trimmed with rows of ribbon and fur. Frequently there are as many as five of them, and they are set wide apart so the top one comes above the knee. All this tends to the effect of width of skirt below the knee. As yet skirts do not set out all around from the knee, they hang close at the front and sides and then the rolus and rulness begin. A front view presents little change from the clinging skirt we are saying a sad good-bye to. It is at the side the difference shows. To effect the setting out, crinoline is sewed back of the rows of ribbon that ornament the skirts, and at that dread word crino-line we feel our hearts sink. But that is

The accompanying picture shows a use of feather trimming, which is very handsome and effective, yet which is entirely different from the method just described. The garment depicted is a visiting dress of nut-brown cloth, which is trimmed with velvet brocaded with a pale green design, and with green marabout. The large felt hat is trimmed with a knot of velver fastened with a buckle, and with a cluster of feathers, shading from straw color to brown.
