THE DRESSING TABLE

If you wish to be beautiful, says a beautiful complexion?" asked the inwriter in the Montreal Standard, quisitive visitor of her hostess. drink camomile tea and if you wish to be fashionable drink camomile tea. The advice is easy to follow, for the tea, in spite of the fact that it makes for beauty and fashion, is very in-expensive. The fashion is only just arriving on this side, but the women who are growing beautiful on their herb beverage say that all French women drink camomile tea in preference to anything else.

A New York woman who is pretty enough not to need complexion improvers was taking luncheon at the home of a friend the other day when she made a discovery. After-luncheon coffee was served to her in the usual tiny after-dinner coffee cup, but the other women at the table were drinking from generous, big, fat, round cups which looked as if they held half a pint each.

Would they ruin their nerves and made up her mind, and not all of them would do it anyway, and besides the complexions of the three were perfect. She had remarked to her hostess on her arrival that she had developed a skin of roses and lilies since she had seen her. "What are you all drinking?" she asked finally. There was a multimillionaire banker's daughter, a wo-man of affairs and a literary woman present.

"Camomilé tea," they all answered like a chorus, and everyone laughed.

quisitive visitor of her hostess.
"Yes," answered the one of roses and lilies, "there is nothing like it for the blood and consequently for the complexion. We all drink it three times a day, and nothing else. It simply makes you over. The French women drink it, and that is what keeps them so fresh and young.

Camomile tea is an old-fashioned remedy of the days of the grand-mothers, when it was taken for colds or as a spring tonic. The Germans also use it in large quantities, though more as a remedy for minor ills than as a beauty drink. It has taken the French women to discover its uses in that direction.

It is the German camomile flower that is used for making the tea. There are two kinds, the German and the Roman. The German is a little daisy-like flower, with a yellow centre, and the Roman like a small doutheir complexions by taking black ble daisy, without a centre. It is to coffee in such quantities? she meditated. No, it couldn't be possible, she ounces will cost five cents, while an made up her mind and not all the ounce will make a pint of strong tea. The druggist will tell fearful inquirers that camomile is, as the beauty seekers say, a good tonic for the blood, that it may be taken in any amount without harm and with really good effects.

The tea is made as other tea is. The boiling water is poured on the little flowers, they are allowed to steep for a time, and then the liquor is strained into the cup for drinking. It has rather a peculiar flavor, not altogether agreeable, but not distinct-

TWO KINDS OF UNDERWEAR Jaeger Pure Wool and the Other Kind

The other kind is the kind that's not pure wool—it may be cotton or linen, or a mixture of wool and something else.

Pure Wool Underwear moisture quickly and throws it off at once, remaining clean, wholesome and comfortable.

Linen and cotton absorb quickly but retain the impurities secreted from the body or from the atmosphere.

Every one knows how linen or cotton clings to the body when wet, and how long one shivers until it dries, and every one knows just as well how quickly pure wool becomes dry and comfortable after being wet. For the same reason cotton or linen remains damp, unwholesome and unhealthy from the secretions of the body, while pure wool—natural animal covering—absorbs and throws off all humidity and impurity. Then why wear anything else than JAEGER PURE WOOL UNDERWEAR All weights and sizes.
