THE GOSPEL SONGSTER.

The Sad Fate of Ira D. Sankey, Who Has Been Seized With Blindness—His Wonderful Career.

Blindness has sealed the eyes of the most remarkable Gospel singer of a century. Who has not heard of Ira D. Sankey? The name, indeed, is familiar wherever the English language is spoken. It is linked inseparably with another name, one of singular power, Moody and Sankey. Is it possible to speak of the one without thinking of the other? These two men will long be remembered as the leaders of a great religious revival. Together they struggled through obscurity to fame. Together they proclaimed hope and faith to millions; fifty millions heard them. A few years ago death ended the eloquent ministry of one. Old age has silenced the songs of the other, and taken the light from his eyes. In his home at Brooklyn, Ira D. Sankey is now blind, stone blind, without hope of ever again seeing the world to which he has sung so sweetly and so wonderfully.

Without Sankey what would Moody have been? This is a conundrum that has no answer, but it is suggested by a contemplation of the lives of the two evangelists. Moody's greatness undoubtedly was revealed to the world by Sankey. It was the songster who first commanded the attention of the masses; who touched the finer and more responsive chords of their being. People paused and then the message of Moody was sent home with irresistible force. Sankey opened hearts; Moody took possession. What the rain and the sun are to nature Moody and Sankey were to the great work they undertook together. And the co-operation was complete. Where the one stopped the other began. Of the two, Moody was the leader, because it was he who first saw the natural relation of the one towards the other and called Sankey to the partnership. But here the leadership ended. In absolute sincerity—the trust of all tests of greatness—Moody was not one whit the leader of Sankey. They were equals.

That first meeting of Moody and Sankey. Was it chance or otherwise? Some tell us there is no such thing as chance. Certainly, Moody knew the kind of help he wanted as he stood that morning in the flat, spiritless prayer meeting in Indianapolis 35 years ago. Years before he had felt the preacher's call. While yet a salesman in a Boston shoe store, where the other salesmen called him the Spider, because he was always so alert, Moody had decided upon his life work. But his progress as a preacher was slow and tedious. At 35 he was recognized as an effective leader. Sunday school conventions, nothing more. There he might have remained had he not met the young singer, then 30 years of age. Sankey's message in song was a revelation to Moody. It lifted the little praying assemblage out of the commonplace into the higher and purer atmosphere of spirituality. The service ended, Moody was at the side of his destined partner. "You are the man I have been looking for for eight years," he said. "You must come and work with me." But Sankey hesitated. He was choir leader in the Methodist Church. He was president of the Y.M.C.A. Moreover, he was a business man, and his wife was his partner. All those things had to be considered. Like a wise man Sankey consulted his wife, and she, like a woman of true insight, knew that the call was one he should accept. Then the world soon heard of Moody and Sankey.

It is only after this conjunction is effected that Moody appears on the platform as a great revivalist. Some say he possesses remarkable personal magnetism. Others give another and higher explanation. But Sankey is singing. His songs are new, or they are old songs in a new dress. Some very proper people take exception to the character of the music. It is certainly conventional, and in that respect it resembles the rugged and simple Moody. But the singer is greater than the song. His singing serves out. Not he. First of all, he must fill up a form stating minutely how, when, and where he lost them. This must be signed by the sergeant, then by an officer, after which it is sent on to the adjutant-general's department. Here it gets into the hands of a staff of clerks, and is passed on from one to another, being initiated here and endorsed there until finally the single sheet form has developed into a "dossier" of many documents, wrapped round with red tape. Then the reverse process sets in, and finally, after many days, Private Tommy Atkins will get his gloves.

Modern and Ancient Building. Solomon's temple was about seven years in building, but it stood for centuries. No one can estimate accurately the life of a modern steel structure, which comes into being in remarkably quick time. In a recent instance in New York an apartment hotel was completed, leased and sold in less than fourteen months after the purchase of the site. The actual work of construction was done in less than ten months, although this was a twelve and a half story building, which covered 71 by 100 feet, and contained more than 200 rooms. These marvels do not come by chance. Every bolt and rivet is planned and provided for before the foundation is laid, and a perfect system controls the gangs of workmen, who carry on the most diverse operations without getting into another's way—YOUTH'S COMPANION.

The Milky Sea.

The milky sea, as it is known to mariners, is not yet fully understood. It seems to be most common in the tropical waters of the Indian ocean, and is described as a weird, ghastly and awe-inspiring and as giving the observer on shipboard the sensation of passing through a sort of luminous fog, in which sea and sky seem to join and all sense of distance is lost. The phenomenon is probably due to some form of phosphorescence.

men were appointed to administer the growing fund. The proceeds were entirely devoted to charity for many years. Afterwards the fund was transferred to the trustees of the Northfield Seminary, founded by Mr. Moody for Bible study. Thus the songs of Sankey brought needed financial aid as well as popular support to Mr. Moody's movement.

In the opinion of Dr. Henry Drummond, the author of "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," "it is impossible to exaggerate the ways in which Sankey contributed to the success of Moody. Perhaps a truer estimate would be that they shared very nearly alike in the great movement. It is indeed impossible to separate the two names or to consider them apart from each other. They belonged to the age in which they lived, rather than to any creed or sect. Moody fell asleep in 1897. In 1903 Sankey becomes blind—Stone blind. And as the light fades from his eyes he says: "God gives and God takes away. It is God's will."

A Great Russian Fair. The annual fair at Nizhni Novgorod, a city on the Volga in Russia, is world-renowned. It lasts two months, during which time the town is crowded with merchants from all parts of the Russian Empire. From almost every city in Europe come goods and visitors. The system bewildering variety of goods on sale at this fair, Mr. Thomas Stevens, in "Through Russia on a Mustang," says that in many ways the customers have to be indulgently humored, to meet the peculiar ways and ideas of the East.

When the Russian, Persian, Siberian or other merchant who trades at Nizhni Novgorod pays his last year's obligations, he expects a present. A wine merchant, after settling his bill, looks over the wholesaler's stock, and selecting a bottle of high-priced champagne, jokingly walks off with it. If the transaction has been in saddle, the customer appropriates a fancy bridle. The Asiatic buyers have a habit of dropping in about meal-time, when, of course, they are politely invited to partake of the tempting spread of caviar, cheese, and other delicacies that is set out in the little rear room.

The regulations in regard to fire are rough on the smoker. A person caught smoking in the streets is arrested and indignantly marched off to the police station, where he is fined fifty rubles. At the hotel a couple of lynx-eyed lackeys are stationed at the entrance to warn the out-going guests of this regulation, and to bar the way of the uninitiated, who would otherwise step jauntily into the street and into the arms of the nearest policeman.

The wisdom of these precautions against fire comes to be understood as the traveler walks about the city and realizes the enormous value of the merchandise that is contained. Every hole and corner is literally crisscrossed by the lines of the merchants. From distant parts of Asia bring their manners and customs with them to Nizhni Novgorod. Young Tartars are seen by the score strolling about the streets, peddling bunches of astrachan lambskins so beautifully dressed as to tempt the passerby to buy. There is a hide and peltry section, where Tartar furs may be seen dressing Siberian sable, bearskins and all manner of costly furs. There is a part devoted to the sale of nuts, the trade in which seems to be in the hands of those who are literally in the hands of the merchants. In hand, whether it be for ten copecks' worth of walnuts to crack and eat or for twenty tons of a dozen varieties.

The fair at Nizhni Novgorod is really commerce on a spree. It is, in fact, the extraordinary collection of goods and people disappears.

War Office Red Tape.

"Fearful and wonderful are the ways of red tape in the War Office," says Household Words. "Private Atkins has, for instance, lost a pair of gloves. Does he get another pair? No. He must first fill up a form stating minutely how, when, and where he lost them. This must be signed by the sergeant, then by an officer, after which it is sent on to the adjutant-general's department. Here it gets into the hands of a staff of clerks, and is passed on from one to another, being initiated here and endorsed there until finally the single sheet form has developed into a 'dossier' of many documents, wrapped round with red tape. Then the reverse process sets in, and finally, after many days, Private Tommy Atkins will get his gloves."

"The blood is the life." Science has never gone beyond that simple statement of scripture. But it has illustrated that statement and given it a meaning ever broadening with the increasing breadth of knowledge. When the blood is "bad" or impure it is not alone the body which suffers through disease. The brain is also clouded, the mind and judgment are affected, and many an evil deed or impure thought may be directly traced to the impurity of the blood. No one can be well balanced in mind and body whose blood is impure. No one can have a wholesome and pure life unless the blood is pure. You blood can be made pure by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. When the blood is pure, body and brain are alike healthy and life becomes a daily happiness.

A TRAVELER'S TALE.

Spell Cast Upon Climbers of the Mexican Mountains Iztaccihuatl and Popocatepetl—Full of Death Traps.

There is a fascination about Popocatepetl and Iztaccihuatl, twin white-clad mountains overlooking the picturesque capital of Mexico, which seems to cast a spell upon all visitors to this Land of the Sun. Popocatepetl is kindly to the climber, and is frequently ascended, but the sides of Iztaccihuatl are steep and covered with ice. Huge crevasses, partially covered with snow, loom the face of the mountain. They are lurking death traps to the unwary, says Mr. G. E. Towle, in Modern Mexico.

But six parties are known to have succeeded in scaling the perilous heights of Iztaccihuatl. The last of these, a party of Swiss mountaineers, was headed by Joseph Dedi, a hardy, experienced Swiss mountain climber, and enthusiastic member of the Swiss Alpine Club. He declares that the scaling of Iztaccihuatl was the most difficult feat of mountain climbing which he has ever undertaken.

"My party numbered six," says Mr. Dedi, and each of us had a guide. The guides had emphatically declared that they knew the way, but at the foot of the first glacier, they confessed that they had never been there before, and were as ignorant of the way as we were. Their scanty clothes and sandals-clad feet incapacitated them for the work of chopping out steps from the solid ice with hatchets, and putting them to the rear we proceeded on our own resources.

"We went slowly, cutting steps for every foot of the way in the ice, on which there was so much toil and discomfort. Many times we came upon yawning crevasses, some of them so deep that chunks of ice thrown into their depths seemed to find no bottom."

"I have scaled many mountains, but I have never before made a trip fraught with so much toil and discomfort. The pulsations of our hearts averaged one hundred and forty-five a minute. Our heads seemed to be bursting and our eyes to be falling from their sockets. We moved slowly and with the greatest care, that no sudden motion might place a greater tax upon our already sorely tried hearts. The sun burned down upon us like flames shooting from a blast furnace. Its rays reflected from the ice at our feet leaped into our faces like fires from the bottomless pit. The skin peeled from our faces and hands, our lips cracked and blood trickled from our ears and nostrils. We reached the summit thoroughly exhausted and dizzy."

"The view was so grand that we were more than repaid for what we had undergone. On Iztaccihuatl man is on one of the high places of the earth. He is in the sky, among the clouds. The earth seems to have fallen miles away with him, leaving him suspended. There is no living thing about him, not even a bird a-wing. He looks down at his feet, and he seems to have come to the end of the earth. Almost straight down, in such a sheer descent that it nearly takes away his breath, lies the world in miniature, a beautiful panorama, remarkably distinct and clear-cut."

"On our return we coasted down the mountain standing, each man secured to the other by a rope, and in three hours had reached the cave whence we had set forth in the early morning."
