A few days ago, our contemporary, the Minerve, styled the whole British population of Lower Canada a NUISANCE, and we presume, of course, that if the old lady had the power, as she has the will, she would exterminate them all; that is a fair inference from the words, and, if we recollect rightly, the extermination of the British population, by driving them into the St. Lawrence, was the avowed object of the Rebellions of 1837 and 1838; but as the British did not choose to be driven into the St. Lawrence, there the matter ended, with some slight damage to the intending drivers. At seven o'clock the Chief of Police ordered the Banks, o'connected with the Association. Most of them are independent of the precarious issues of the world, and all of them are remarkable for their exemplary morals, habits of good order, neatness, and respectable mental acquirement Many of them have gone forth into honorable and useful society, married into the best circles of wealth and distinction, and become patronemes to some of the less fortunate of their companions in the humble walks of industry. These young women, many of them excel in polite literature, and, at this very period, rublish, under their patronage, Literary Journal, whose columns are enriched with mary of their own effusions. Such is this this Manufactory, conducted, as it is, under the humble title of 'The Lowell Factory Girls." What an honor to the sex - What a triumph for umanity! Here are Industrial Resources worthy f universal patronage. Now, Mr. President, and adies and Gentlemen, contemplate for a moment he establishment of such a Manufactory contiguous to the City of Montreal, amply endowed and rich in the resources of the various raw maerials of the Province, such as wool, flux, and other staple productions-transfer to its hal's of industry the poor girls who, as paupers, daily fill our streets, and at night shame, by the degrading necessity of poverty, the chaste stars that shine above them - and how changed would be their condition. Let discipline, order, moral government, and habits of industry, give place to idleness, crime, and evil example, and the scene at Lowell, and the results of its well-regulated establishment, would be renewed on the banks of our St. Lawrence and the streams of our Ottawa."

> Beards, &c. MONTREAL, January 28, 1851.

To the DUKE OF WELLINGTON: FIELD MARSHAL! - Order the Army to heir moustaches and beards. The Cavalry and Horse Artillery already wear moustaches; why should not all the other corps? God caused beards and moustaches to grow; why counteract his order? Is it that we, human worms, know better than He what is beneficial and becoming? Moustaches and beards were intended (as eyebrows, eyelashes, and the hair on our heads) to protect those parts on which they grow; it is nearly as absurd to shave off our moustaches and beards as it would be our eyel-rows and eyelashes. It is said that medical men have found less diseases of the cliest in regiments which wear moustaches than in those which do not. Sampson's strength consisted in his hair. Perhaps the decrease in the North American Aboriginal population may, in some degree, be attributed to their flacking out much of their hair. The Orientals look much more like men than we. The adoption of my suggestion would render annecessary shaving apparatus, though it would require increased work with the comb. Now, all the fellows with frowsy hair will vociferate against the proposal; while all those with jet-colored, or dark brown or chestnut, or flavous hair, will receive it w t acclamation. But neither applause, nor disapprobation, can influence "The Iron Duke ? he will adopt my suggestion, if he thinks it right. Field Marshal! Your sincere admirer,
