ever, verified the young doctor's discovery, and the community was throughly startled. It was composed mainly of descendants of old French settlers. The English language was not much spoken. Families had intermarried for nearly two centuries, until whole parishes were dove-tailed. The result was similar to that attending the overbreeding of animals. The blood became overheated and impure. Its impurities were quickened by a diet of salt meats and dried fish, and a genuine leprosy cropped to the surface. There were 78 cases in one section within twelve months.

The Provincial Parliament was spurred to action under the personal appeals of the members from Miseriel A. It was a composit, for the soil is thin and poor.
