LEGISLATIVE COUNGI

WEDNESDAY, February 29th. THE House met at half-past four o'clock. Hon. the President laid before the House petition that had been forwarded to him from Trepassey, on the subject of prohibition.

Hon. M. MONGOE presented a petition from the inhabitants of Shoal Harbor, Trinity Bay, on the subject of prohibition.

ORDER OF THE DAY:

SECOND READING OF SEAL FISHERY PROTECTION ACT AMENDMENT BILL. Hon. the Colonial Secretary said, when this bill came up for the approval of this Chamber, he had explained the circumstances connected with it, and gave his reasons, it not being a Government measure, for not moving in a matter of so much importance to the trade to maintain ownership to panned seals, should and general interest of the colony without first having had a consultation with its introducer who, at the time, was absent from St. John's He had thought, also, that as it related wholly to the prosecution of one of our staple industries, its explanation in this Chamber would come more appropriately from one of the commercial members of the Chamber than from him. However, at the suggestion of hon. Mr. Monroe, it was, as a matter of ordinary courtesy, read a first time; but that hon. gentleman does not apparently desire to take any further steps in advancing it to subsequent stages. In now, therefore, moving that the bill be read a second time, he (C. S.) would remark that its principle is confined chiefly to of last session, which defined the right of property in seals killed and bulked, or panned, upon the ice; and, secondly, it limits the time twentieth of March. Hon. members, no doubt, remember that the Act passed last year was, in its passage through both branches of the Legislature, the subject of much consideration and discussion, and in its final shape established principles of right that governed cases of litigation which frequently occurred, arising out of disputed ownership of seals killed and panned at the sealfishery. It seals killed and panned, should keep up a conabolished the previously existing custom by that the bill be now read a second time.

extensive practical experience in that branch of our industries with which the measure proposes directly to deal. So far as he (Mr. P.) could ascertain, the reasons that prompted him to move in the matter by bringing forward this measure are endorsed by many others of equal experience in the prosecution of the seal-fishery. As he understood the bill, it differs materially only upon two points from the Act of last year. The provision prohibiting the panning of seals before the 20th of March, is framed, he was led to believe, in the interests of the less powerful steamers and smaller vessels. If that would prove to be the result of this bill, then it commends itself strongly to his approval. As regards the other point, he perceived much force in the contention that the operation of last year's Act would involve the risk of health, and possibly the lives of the men who, in order remain upon the ice night and day subject to the caprice of the winds and waves. If this ground of agreement be admitted, then it would be but rational as well as an act of humanity, to take such action as would obviate the possibility of those serious consequences. These grounds were sufficient, he thought, to recommend the bill to the favorable consideration of this chamber; they were at all events reasons sufficient to justify him in supporting

Hon. C. Bowring entirely disapproved of the proposed repeal of an act so recently passed and after long and careful consideration of both branches of the legislature, as that of last session. He thought that in any matter wo points. It first proposes to repeal the Act of legislation, when the legislature passes an enactment for any object after serious deliberation it should not be hastily superseded without grave cause. Such a course would for panning to a period subsequent to the strultify the proceedings of those who took part in them and render legislation a mockery and a delusion. When he rembered the time, trouble, and attention that were devoted to the discussion and consideration of the law which those who assisted in framing and assenting to, are now desiring to rescind without trial of its merits, he must characterize the proceeding as strange and extraordinary to say the least of it. They had, during the provided that masters and crews of vessels, in progress of the measure through the legislaorder to maintain a right to their property in ture last session, no evidence taken officially regarding the effect of its provisions, but intinous personal watch over them; otherwise formation was obtained from nearly all sources they might become the property of other crews of value, and opinions of practical persons were coming along in their absence. This law obtained, the general view being that it would prove to be a law highly beneficial to the which seals bulked upon the ice, and marked interests of the country as affected by the by flags, remained the property of those so special industry it was enacted to protect. He killing and marking them at no matter what altogether disagreed with the hon. Mr. Pitts distance from their vessel. This bill, on the that the provisions of the bill now submitted contrary, proposes to do away with the obliga- to them for approval would conserve the intion of maintaining personal guard and pos- terests of the less powerful ships. He thought session, thus relegating the practice to that quite the contrary would be its tendency: that which existed prior to the enactment of last it would place the whole chance of the voyage session. As a reason for this proposal, it is in the hands steamers of greater power, urged by those having most intimate practical indiscriminate panning of seals giving them knowledge of proceedings at the seal fishery, at any time an immense advantage over their that by obliging masters to compel their crews | weaker neighbors. The crew of one of the to watch the seals when bulked, which they, in large steamers on getting among the seals can their anxiety to secure their property, would begin to take them while the ship keeps steamnaturally do, a grave responsibility is impos- ing ahead, and with her powerful steam winches ed upon them by causing them to expose the | can take on board two seals for every one that lives of their men to risk of loss from fog, a smaller vessel could take. A case had been drifting ice, or severity of weather; and that related to him of a powerful steamer getting if obliged to remain in watch on the ice all early into the seals, her crew panning and flagnight and day, serious results might occur, as | ging seven or eight thousand, and when others no man can foresee the possibilities of the ele- of the fleet came up the master of the former ments. The preservation of human life should abandoned his seals, went ahead and took up be the first consideration of the Legislature in fresh berths and loaded his ship; but the seals making laws, and if the allegations urged in he had left behind being flagged were entirely favor of this measure, that it will tend more lost, because the ships following in his wake largely to that end than the act of last year, respected the flags placed as marks on the that object should with us be paramount. He did not hon. gentlemen of this Chamber, who have ex- think there need be apprehended any danger perience and knowledge of this subject, infi- to life under the operation of the provision of nitely in excess of his (C. S.), take that view the existing law which requires personal of the case, it is for them to say whether the guardianship or possession to constitute right reason is sufficient for the passage of the bill of property in panned seals; and he believed now before them. He had no argument to disputes and conflicts would be much more advance in support of the measure beyond a likely to occur under this bill which would bare statement of its object and the dangers foster litigation, to obviate which was one of it proposes to remove.
