They Agree to Differ.

A striking instance of a house divided against itself on questions of politics is furnished by the case of the Earl and Countess of Carlisle and their family. The Earl has been doscribed as an "unswerving and rigid" Tory, while his wife has always been a staunch supporter of the Liberal cause. Their son, the Hon. Geoffrey Howard, is also a keen Liberal, while the eldest son of the family, Viscount Morpeth, has been elected again for South Birmingham as a Unionist.
