Half Truths or None.

By RUTH CAMERON.

RUTH CAMERON

There are few things less kind and more futile to my mind than the faint praise given by the person who is trying to steer a middle course between telling a lie and saying outright that he doesn't like your new hat or other new appurtenance.

When anyone tries to compromise between being unkind and telling an untruth, he (or she, more likely) usually succeeds only in being unkind and telling a half-truth, which is by intention an untruth.

For instance, you have a new gown. You put it on for inspection. It is a blue gown. Your inspector looks you over and says, "Yes, it's real pretty," this in half-hearted tones. A moment or two later she asks what became of the brown dress you used to wear, and says with fervor, "I do like you in brown."

Have you any doubt what she thinks of your new dress, which is not brown? Not the slightest.

She Admires Your Lace, Not Your Gown.

Or you display your new evening gown. Not a word about becomingness or style. Your inspector looks you over and says, "Yes, it's real pretty." Of course you are glad to have your lace admired, but you know perfectly well that she doesn't like the rest of the gown. She has saved her soul alive by telling only the truth, and she has given you that sick, miserable feeling which any woman has when she finds that the new gown she has lotted on so much is not becoming, especially when she knows that she cannot have another for many moons.

Again, you appear in your new hat and wait in breathless hopes and fears for the verdict.

"Couldn't you tip it a little more to one side?" inquires the jury. "There, that's better!" with an accent on the "better" that says all too plainly that it is so only by comparison with a very feeble good.

They Think They Are Tactful and Truthful, But—

Doubtless all these people, think they have been tactful in saying nothing unkind, and truthful in that they said nothing but the truth.

As for the tactfulness, did they never hear of damning with faint praise?

As for truthfulness, isn't it their intention to make the possessor think they liked the gown or hat? And what is a lie, but "an intention to deceive"?

What would I have them do?

If the Thing Can Be Changed I Say I Dislike It.

I would not want to advise in so delicate a matter, but if you want my own method of procedure, here it is: If the thing is something which can be changed, like a method of hair-dressing, or a garment sent on approval, or a suitor being weighed in the balance, and I don't like it, I say so frankly.

But if it is something irrevocable, I say I like it, not so enthusiastically perhaps as I do, when, I'm really pleased, but warmly enough not to give my hearer a chill.

One thing I'm careful to do. I don't repudiate my judgments by admitting afterwards when the dress is thrown aside that I never liked it.

Doubtless St. Peter will think much less of me than if I merely lived by inference. And yet—I wonder?

Black and black and white will be worn by the fashionable.

New York Globe—If Germany wishes good relations with this country she can readily have them. She can have them by indicating in a clear way her regret for having departed from international law and her firm intention to act in the future in conformity with the mandates of international morality. As a people we care more for the spirit displayed than for particular acts. Should Germany even now, abandoning all shuffling and evasion, genuinely apologize for the Lusitania massacre and establish in this country the belief that she has returned to allegiance to international law and to respect for the common rights of humanity, this country would be willing to keep her citizens away from armed ships. But as things are we are asked to yield as to a small matter by a power that has gravely injured us in great matters and is seemingly unrepentant.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

"How long should it be before I should receive a company or go out to entertainments after my husband's death?" inquired the young widow.

"A widow should not receive the company of men for a year to show proper respect for her husband's memory," replied her friend. "She may begin going to the theatre after six months if she wishes."

Obituary.

We are sorry to note the death of one of our old and trustworthy Captains in the person of Capt. James Wilson, which sad event occurred at his late residence, 15 Cochrane St. Deceased was a native of St. Austie, Cornwall, England, and came to this country in 1871 as first officer of Bowring Bros. brigantine Harriett, which a year later was lost on Oporto Bar. Then crossing to Liverpool he joined the Byanka for here; next taking charge of the brigantine Silvia, and later the brigantine Vidonia, serving the said employ as Master for twenty-seven years. Having to resign through ill health he was appointed Surveyor for the Newfoundland Mutual Marine Insurance Club, also Assistant Examiner of Masters and Mates. His last trip to the Old Country was in command of the Terra Nova across for the Scott South Pole Expedition, making a quick run of 10 days from here to London. Deceased is a member of the Masonic Fraternity. To the wife and family we tender our sincere sympathy.

THE HERMIT

Old Huxy is a hermit and mystic, his manner is stately and grave, his diet is antiphotogenic, he spends all his years in a cave.

"My health," he remarks, "is a wonder, although I'm as old as get out; rheumatism don't pain me asunder, I have not the springhalt of gout. I warble my optimist ditties, my soul's full of sunshine and hope; but when I resided in cities, I always was swallowing dope. I always had shingles or colic, or Bright's justly famous disease; the rheumatiz often would frolic all over my fetlocks and knees. If man would keep grief in the distance, and feel like a Percheron steer, he must lead the simple existence, and cut out the 'urban career'."

"Methinks," I replied, "you are paying too heavy a price for your bliss; while far from the bright lights you're staying, just think of the fun that you miss! I'd rather have smallpox or bunions. I'd rather have seven-year itch, than fill up with turnips and onions, and live in a cave or a ditch."

THE FRENCH ARE CONFIDENT

PARIS, March 6.—Yesterday was a good day for French at Verdun, according to formation received this morning. Public confidence is greatly strengthened by news of the continued pulses of the German attacks. Military and political circles are satisfied in expressed regard to the situation, and opinion now begins to prevail that the great effort of the Germans will be left disposed of than was at first expected. Having failed to make any impression on the Douaumont position and on Vaux, to its right, the German general staff determined to smash the French left on the Verdun front. The Germans finally fell back with no more success than elsewhere. Pomeranians, dashed themselves vainly against the French, who were as immovable as a rock wall, and the Germans finally fell back, leaving heaps of dead on the ground. The French infantry, supported by their formidable artillery, which never henceforth lack ammunition, showed themselves able to resist every onslaught. An idea of the relatively small percentage of French casualties in the Verdun battle is considered as deducible from a statement made by a lieutenant who arrived here wounded. Our losses, he said, are comparatively slight. A regiment, for instance, had only killed and 35 wounded. The small for a unit which has been engaged as support, and which was engaged in the most violent of the fighting.

NO INFANTRY ACTIONS BUT LENT ARTILLERY.

PARIS, March 6.—An official statement given out to-day says that there were no infantry actions last night north of Verdun, but that violent artillery engagements continue along the bank of the Meuse and elsewhere. Quiet prevails on the Meuse front.

MOVEMENT OF GERMAN TROOPS IN BELGIUM.

LONDON, March 6.—An important movement of German troops in Belgium is reported in a despatch from the Hague. It is stated that information has been received from the Hague from Maastricht, Holland, that 40,000 German cavalry near the Landstrum are on their way to the front near Ypres.

PENDING COLLAPSE OF TURKEY.

LONDON, March 6.—The morning papers contain the news of the alleged impending collapse of Turkey as a participant in the war. The Daily Telegraph speculates that the probable change of government would have on the attitude of Bulgaria and Greece. It says: "The Turks are brought weary of a struggle in which they were butchered, and make a Teuton holiday, what about Romania and Greece likely to assume? If the Germans great and get move in the Balkans is threatened with failure, the Entente will have every reason to discern the end."
