

Are you in form to-day?

How often do you get up in the morning with that glorious feeling that you are ready to tackle anything and anybody?

How often do you carry that feeling with you throughout the day, knowing nothing of morning irritability, of afternoon sleepiness, of five o'clock weariness, and utter dejection of body and mind?

How often do you return home fit to enjoy every moment of your hours of leisure, taking your recreation with all the greater zest because during the day you have got through a full-size man's job with a full-size man's keenness and efficiency?

How often? Once a week? Once a month?

Why not every day?

New Stories By O. HENRY

LUCKY EITHER WAY.

The Memphis Commercial-Appeal, in commenting on errors in grammar, made by magazines, takes exception to an error in construction occurring in a story which a character is made to say: "You will be lucky if you escape with only marrying one."

A man says this to another one who is being besieged by two ladies, and the Commercial-Appeal thinks he is intended to say: "You will be lucky if you escape with marrying only one."

Now, after considering the question, it seems likely that there is more in Mr. J. H. Connolly's remark than is dreamed of in the philosophy of the Commercial-Appeal.

The history of matrimony gives color to the belief that, to whichever one of the ladies the gentleman might unite himself, he would be lucky if he escaped with only marrying her.

THE ETERNAL QUESTION by Felice Davis

THE LAST LAUGH.

Ann—You've come at last! You don't know how I've looked forward to seeing you.

George—The clerk at the desk told me to come right up to your private sitting-room. I hope that doesn't mean you're ill?

Ann—No, not ill—just lonely. Sit down here beside me.

George—But your brother— isn't he here?

Ann—Frank's away on business as usual—he never thinks how stupid it is for me alone in this huge hotel.

George—It's a shame. He doesn't appreciate what a treasure you are.

Ann—Is a treasure?

George—Yes. Why, with your beauty and charm, you could make any man pay tribute to you.

Ann—Any man? But I don't want any man. I only want you.

George—Ann! Do you mean—?

Ann—Yes?

George—You know how I feel about you from the moment your brother introduced us. I knew you were the woman I'd been looking for.

Ann—Take me in your arms and tell me—I'll believe you then.

George—There. Now are you convinced?

Ann—Hold me close—close—

George—Listen! What was that noise?

Ann—Noise? I didn't hear—

George—Footsteps. Someone's coming—it's your brother.

Ann—Frank? You! You here!

Frank—So this is what I catch you up to, is it? You're a fine pair.

George—You don't understand—I love her.

Frank—I understand, all right. I've found you making love to my wife.

George—Yes, wife! Don't pretend you didn't know it.

George—I didn't—I swear.

Frank—But you'll pay for this, all right.

Ann—Frank! Put that pistol down! George, he'll kill you!

Frank—You're going to pay me ten thousand dollars—now—for this business or you don't go out of here alive, get that?

George—Ten thousand dollars? But this is blackmail!

Frank—You can pay all right or—

Ann—Oh, pay him, George! Pay him for my sake!

George—then—for your sake—I'll write the check now—

Getting married is the easiest part of the affair. It is what comes afterward that makes a man sometimes wish a wolf had carried him into the forest when he was a little boy. It takes only a little nerve, a black coat, from five to ten dollars, and a girl, marrying a woman. Women are sometimes so capricious and unreasonable that they demand that a man stay around afterwards, and board and clothe them, and build fires, and chop wood, and cook chickens out of the garden, and tell the dressmaker when to send in her bill again.

We would like to read the story in question and find out whether the man was lucky enough to only marry the lady, or whether she held on to him afterward and didn't let him escape.
