TO CITY SUBSCRIBERS.

We should esteem it a favor if subscribers in the city would immediately report to us any irregularity or incivility on the part of carriers.

THE PAPERS OF THE South are very outspoken in their expression of sorrow over Garfield's loss. Around the grave of Lincoln only the North was gathered; for Garfield the whole nation mourns.

THE LAST COTTON CROP of the south realized 284 million dollars, divided among planters, transportation lines, and the laborers who handled the crop. The crop consisted of 6,065,750 bales 2,832,127 went to Great Britain, and 1,757,219 to the continent and Canada.

COPPER at present fetches 184 cents a pound, 7 cents below the average of the past twenty years; consequently a number of mines in the Lake Superior region have been forced to suspend work. The Michigan peninsula is the great source for American supplies at present. The Lake Superior copper, however, is the best in the world.

ENGLISH RAILWAYS possess over 1000 miles of the canals of Britain, representing an immense expenditure. These canals were purchased by the railways to silence the competition of water carriage, and they are jealously kept idle by the companies.

THE CONDITION of things in England is a justification of the state ownership of canals which prevails in Canada and New York.

AN ACTION involving a certain amount of money, in which Hon. John O'Connor was defendant, was held in the city last week. The jury disagreed, and no verdict was returned, but the Globe is authority for the statement that eleven of them were for giving a verdict one way, and the remaining man the opposite. This man's objection was sufficient to break the whole case and send it for a new trial. Does it not seem absurd that such a state of things is allowed to exist? Is it not asking too much for unanimity in a jury when trying a civil case? We submit that the time has come when majority verdicts should be recognized. We are convinced that more substantial justice would be done thereunder than is the case at present.

AMERICAN STREET NAMES. There are 110 postal delivery cities in the United States, and a directory of the names of the streets in each of them has just been issued. The directory is intended to facilitate the delivery of letters undisturbed or unobscured. Under the name of each city are grouped the names of the streets having such a name, and with the help of other little details it is usually easy to tell to what city a letter bearing, say, only a street address without a city address, or having the wrong city address, should go.

Nearly ninety out of the 110 cities have their Washington street; there are fifty Adams streets; sixty are named after Madison; seventy after Jefferson; Lincoln and Grant, fifty each. In the 110 cities there are fifty Broadways, over sixty Main streets, the same number of Front streets, seventy-five High streets, and so on through the list of stock names. Henry, John, George and William, these exemplary names, are conferred upon about fifty streets each, and so on. In Augusta, Ga., there is a Pigtail alley, and three cities boast of a Pig-alley. New Orleans has a Piety street, and Providence a Benevolent street. Richmond and San Francisco have a Charity street. There are forty Elizabeth streets.

YESTERDAY'S TRIBUTE TO GARFIELD. Yesterday the bells were tolling on two occasions. All the bells of Toronto tolled. Although the bells were tolling on the first of his death, the tolling ceremony was witnessed by thousands. The whole land was in mourning and the whole world was in sympathy with it.

There is no exaggeration in saying that the death of no other public man of this century, either in Europe or America, has been so widely lamented. Some among them have gone down to their graves in the fulness of their years, some by accident, some on the field of battle and some by the hand of the assassin, but none—whether kings, nobles or statesmen—have filled so large a place in the world's heart as the late President Garfield.

He was the representative man of his nation—the chosen ruler of fifty millions of freemen. He was the constitutional head of his country, and honor paid to him at his death is honor paid to the nation. This tribute is one of the most beautiful and touching tributes.

Another is, that the act of a noble and unselfish death. He was not an usurper, a tyrant or an oppressor, but a man placed in the seat of supreme power by the free voice of the people, and subject like every other citizen to the constitution and laws of the country. He had not abused the trust; he had wronged no man; he aimed to do what was right according to the light that he had.

The act of the assassin, therefore, was unexcused by the shadow of an excuse. It was a blow struck at the nation rather than at the individual. Hence in a large degree the widespread sympathy at home and abroad.

The sense of personal loss, we cannot help thinking, was the least of the causes for yesterday's tribute. Mr. Garfield was a great and good man, but not in a personal sense. He was not a distinguished, eminent degree. He was not a politician or statesman had scarcely extended to the limits of his own country. He was not a Gladstone, a Disraeli, a Bright, a Bismarck or a Gortschakoff, though with years and opportunities he might have attained to their greatness. But he was worthy, able and honorable, and it is pleasant to reflect that his country may have a thousand men any one of whom might worthily fill his place.

To parody a sentence from his own most eloquent speech, "President Garfield is dead, but the government at Washington still lives." It lives, stronger for his life and more sacred for his death; and though the ways of Providence are often dark and mysterious, we can see how this chastening stroke has wrought good for the world—how by it all peoples have been brought to feel the brotherhood of man. Especially and truly may it be said that England and America have been made one again.

The extraordinary popularity of the Princess of Wales in England is due to good looks, good nature, and very pleasing manners. She is not in the least an intellectual woman.

The Princess Imperial of Germany has concluded her long visit to the Isle of Wight. The queen could not find room for her at Osborne, but the Duke of Bedford lent her his fine villa.

Ex-President Hayes has a farm near Bismarck, Dakota, which he obtained at from 60 to 75 cents an acre. It is now worth $15 an acre, and it is so rich that Mr. Hayes realized from his 500 acres of wheat last year a profit of $15,000.

Although the queen has had the royal apartments of Holyrood rehabilitated for her reception, the queen remains roofless. It is a beautiful structure, and its vaults are still the burial place of many historic Scottish families. In these days of restoration, it is somewhat remarkable that the queen is permitted to remain thus dilapidated.

While President Garfield was with his sick wife at Elberon, he declined an agent's persuasions to insure his life, on the ground that he could not afford to pay the premium. After much discussion, however, he finally consented to take out a policy for $10,000, the agent agreeing to take two notes for the premium, which amount to $10,000, and which will be paid by Garfield's chief in $10,000, and will be called for by the estate.

FASHION'S FREAKS. Some Suggestions to the Fair Sex—How to Dress to be Admired.

Increased length in the skirt for all outside garments imported for the coming season; this is seen in the simplest paletoes as well as in luxurious great cloaks for winter, which are now fifty-two inches long and envelop the wearer from head to foot.

The directors styles are repeated for coats, while jackets are in the main, long shapes rather than the masculine and jaunty English styles so long in vogue.

For cloaks, the straight Japanese garment with wide sleeves, and showing manly bishop's sleeves, remain most in favor.

Plush is the favorite material of the season, and will be used not merely for trimmings and for jackets, but for long cloaks as well.

Cloth paletoes are more than two-thirds of the length of the dress skirt, and follow the outline of the skirt, and are being closely fitted. They are double-breasted, and have two side forms, one of which comes very far toward the front.

The hunting jacket shape, now being closely fitted, are made of diagonal twill or else smooth surface and tufted wrong side, are used for these paletoes, and the trimmings are most invariably of plush.

The plush collar is deep enough to make a cape, and is out of straight across the back, giving a square effect that is now considered stylish.

A bonnet measuring from six to ten inches in width is made of the plush, and put across the end of the paletoe.

Cuffs of plush are not deep enough to make a cuff, but are, and have the effect of being turned, back from the inside.

Large side pockets are seen on some garments, but preference is for pockets set underneath the skirt, and showing merely a slit as an opening for the hand; this slit is cut bias and is bound with plush.

Two rows of shell or metal or wooden buttons are down the front, and being shorter jackets fitted closely to the figure, and either single or double-breasted, are made of the English home-spun and Scotch cloths that resemble those worn by gentlemen.

Short jackets are very jaunty, and are popular with young ladies. They may be cut away below the waist line, or else buttoned their entire length.

A coat collar of plush is the only trimming on jackets, as the sleeves are simply bound, and the pockets are the narrow slit on the hips and on the left breast. The single side form of the back is broad and short, beginning in the arm-holes.

The hunting jacket shape are also retained for the girls' garments, but with fewer plaits than those of last season.

Silk mull is in lieu of the mull muslin is seen in new cloaks, and kerchiefs for the neck. It is most liked in cream white, but may also be had in pure white. The trimming is of Arrillaco and Maureque laces.

Net kerchiefs with new designs of vermicelli lace are pretty and becoming, and are many fashions imported of Languedoc net wrought on the edges, and therefore not requiring trimming for the neck.

Black and white silk Saraha are made up in shirred Mother Hubbard collar deep enough to cover the shoulders; these make a pretty finish for dress waists that are plainly trimmed.

Ombre striped mull squares are the newest kerchiefs for general wear. These come in light drab, brown, pale gray and olive green stripes, and are pretty with black or dark-colored dresses.

Straight linen bands are the newest collar; these are severe, stylish and simple, and are not universally becoming, but are very pretty with simple dark dresses when fastened by slender silver brooch, or else by a gold or jeweled collar-button.

Dark navy blue and the paler porcelain blue percale collars are made in the same way; both polka dots and stripes of white are on these colored collars. The cuffs to match are square and fastened by linked sleeve-buttons.

Large mantles are among the most comfortable and becoming of the new wraps. They are fitted by three seams behind, and have a sleeve-like side piece; the back extends low over the shoulders, and the front hangs straight to the knees.

The novelty for long wraps is to make them entirely of plush, either black or seal brown, and to line them with gray striped or ombre plush, or else with quilted satin.

Jet and colored beads in amber and bronze shades are used for trimmings, but there are a greater number of passementerie ornaments without beads.

For receptions, for the carriage and evening wear, Indian cashmires of the rich colors seen in shawls are used for these wraps, and are trimmed with plush, feather ruffles, or with seal skin fringe.

For morning wear and for travelling mantle during the autumn are straight wraps in three-quarter lengths, made of Scotch cloths in blocks, and in dard invisible plaids.
