

crood, or the extension of Presbyterianism, it is obvious that it may legitimately lay claim to the designation of catholic; and, we may add, that the catholicism of Presbyterianism is very different from the catholicism of Popery. Presbyterianism may be found in all parts of the globe, and it is everywhere at home, for it speaks in vernacular tongue, and uses language which to every one is intelligible. Popery, too, may be found everywhere; but it is everywhere a stranger, for it uses an unknown tongue, and everything about it is suspicious and perplexing. Wherever Presbyterianism appears, it carries with it an open Bible, and, in the spirit of a true Catholic, it invites all to read the Word of God's own communication;—wherever Popery exists, it treats the Bible worse than would a Turk or a Heathen, and when it has the power, it consigns to the prisons of the Inquisition those who seek to be acquainted with the catholic doctrine of the holy oracles. Wherever Presbyterianism prevails, it is found connected with the catholic blessings of civilization, social comfort, and civil liberty; whereas Popery has established its dominion, it appears connected with the catholic curses of ignorance, beggary, and despotism. We leave our readers to decide the catholicity of Popery and the catholicity of Presbyterianism.—Irish Presbyterian.
