FOR THE TAILOR-MADE GIRL.

The young woman who aspires to masculine severity of attire should copy with the utmost faithfulness masculine fastidiousness about collars and ties. Many a girl spoils the effect of a tailor costume by some ridiculously inappropriate tie, and there have been girls who did not seem to recognize that the alpha and omega of the law in regard to collars was comprised in absolute cleanliness.

You cannot, however economically minded you may be, wear a linen collar two successive days. In fact, it is often advisable to change it oftener.

Never accept from the hands of your washerwoman or laundryman a linen collar which has been smudged by the iron. No well-dressed man would, and the girl of masculine attire must follow this custom.

Do not put on ancient and slightly frayed collars under the fond delusion that the ragged edge will escape notice. Even if it does not attract attention itself it will leave a line of red, sore skin upon the neck.

Do not wear with your linen collars ties that no well-dressed man would think of wearing. Find out what is correct in form and learn to tie them correctly and fasten them in some way so that they will not slide from side to side.

A LONGER who caused a great deal of trouble in the house was Mr. Dreck, a professional conjurer, whose feats were of such an extraordinary nature that some of the more nervous lady-lodgers had serious doubts as to the ownership of his soul.

Sarah Ann, however, hurt his feelings by sneering at his powers, and comparing him, to his great disadvantage, with a man she had once seen on Margate pier. Dreck was hurt at her contempt, and one day, followed by two or three of the lodgers, walked into the kitchen with a little fat mouse clasped in his hand, in order to read her a lesson.

“Now, we don't want any of your nonsense here,” said Sarah, looking up uneasily.

Dreck pushed up his sleeves, and displayed the mouse grasped firmly in his hand.

“Presto, pass,” said he, and the little animal vanished.

“Pooh,” said Sarah, hastily mounting a chair; “it's gone up your sleeve.”

Dreck smiled and shook his head.

“Where is it, then?” asked Sarah, snappishly, as she held her dress round her ankles and glanced keenly round the room.

“Now,” said Dreck, turning to the grinning audience: “if Sarah Ann will kindly leave go of her dress, and feel in her pocket—”

“Call it back,” screamed Sarah shaking herself wildly; “call it back.”

“It's all right,” said the conjurer, smiling; “you'll get quite fond of it in time.”

“Murder!” continued Sarah, shrilly, totally ignoring his assurances; “help, murder! fire!”

Mellum, entering the kitchen breathlessly.

“He's put a mouse in my pocket,” sobbed the handmaiden, still shaking her skirts.

“Take it out directly, sir,” said the landlady, stamping her foot.

“Where shall I put it?” inquired Dreck.

“Where you like,” said the landlady, sharply.

“Presto, pass,” said Dreck.

“Is it out?” said Sarah, panting.

“Yes, it's all right,” said Dreck, soothingly; “it's in Mrs. Mellum's pocket now.”

To the astonishment of all present, the landlady, whose horror of mice was well known, sat down and smiled calmly at the conjurer.

“Can't you feel it wriggling?” asked the latter.

“No; I can't feel it at all,” said the landlady.

“Are you sure?”

“Certainly,” said Mrs. Mellum; “I haven't got a pocket in this dress.”

In the midst of unbridled laughter the discomfited Dreck quitted the kitchen, and for some time refrained from further displays of his talent.

MALTINE WITH COD LIVER OIL AND HYPOPHOSPHITES.

A FOOD, MEDICINE AND DIGESTIVE.

Thousands of invalids are starving—starving in the midst of plenty, and despite the tender care of loved ones. Health is restored, not by what is eaten, but by what is digested. Maltine with Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites is a food, for it is rich in the nourishing properties of wheat, oats and barley; a medicine, for it is combined with the best Norwegian oil, which renders it palatable, non-irritating, and readily assimilated, and a powerful digestive, for it acts rapidly upon starchy foods, making them soluble and capable of supplying in abundance the elements of nutrition. One bottle is of greater remedial value than ten bottles of any emulsion. Try it.

THE TORONTO CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

has been before the public an entire decade, and its educational work during this period has been of such character as to make the institution a power in the Dominion for disseminating the love of music and encouraging the study of this “divine art.” The unqualified prosperity enjoyed, and the material progress made by the Conservatory during its history have been such, that larger and much more commodious premises have become positively necessary. To provide this larger accommodation and greater facilities for the constantly increasing work of the Conservatory, its enterprising management have recently purchased a site, the most eligible in the city, on the south-west corner of College St. and Queen's Ave. The architect's plans and specifications for the erection of new buildings of modern style, including a first class music hall, are ready, and the work has been commenced, the whole to be finished by August next, when the removal to the new premises will take place. Being in the vicinity of the University of Toronto, McMaster University, Victoria and Wyckoff colleges and other institutions of learning, this is the finest locality for the Conservatory of Music in the city. It is very central and easy of access by cars from all parts of the city.

SAVED HER DRUNKEN HUSBAND.

SHE FINALLY ADMINISTERED A REMEDY WITHOUT HIS KNOWLEDGE, AND CURED HIM.

A correspondent writes: “I had such a happy home and a noble, big-hearted husband till he took to drinking, first through sociability, then because the fiendish desire would come over him, crazing him for drink.”

“I was heart broken. My happy home was fast becoming one of misery till a friend told me to try a liquor cure called ANTI-BOOZE. I was willing to try anything, so I sent $1.00, as suggested, to the Oriental Chemical Co., 20 St. Alexis St., Montreal, and by return mail, I received in a plain wrapper a little box of pills. I put one of these in his coffee every night and mornning without him knowing it, (as they dissolve immediately), and in less than a week, to my delight, he stopped drinking entirely.”

“ANTI-BOOZE has changed my drunken husband into a sober, industrious, happy man, and I feel it my duty to tell others about it. They will send full information without charges to any who will write them.”

See the Dust Fly

A winter's dust will be found in the curtains that drape your windows, and other parts of the home. They've lost their first brightness, but they'll prove as bright as now after having been cleaned in these works. The cleaning of the highest quality in curtains is a successful feature of business here.
