

Since this was written, we have heard with sorrow of the death of that noble Christian Soldier, the excellent Havelock. He has received his reward, and entered into the rest that remaineth for the people of God.

THE CANADIAN SCHOOL.

We are glad to observe that, in spite of the commercial depression, this little effort is likely to be successful. The acknowledgment of the Treasurer indicates the hold that the Orphanage Scheme has taken upon the hearts of our children, and fully entitles it to the appellation of "The Juvenile Mission." We doubt not, the effects at home upon the Church will yet be felt. An interest in Mission work will be implanted, that will bring forth fruit in the after-lives of our present active little labourers in the Mission cause. We are led to believe that we will soon be able to report the completion of the raising of the sum required, and have every confidence that it will be supplied, as nearly half the amount has already been remitted.

DELHI.

A writer in the Juvenile Missionary Magazine, who has visited Delhi, gives the following description of the city:—

In Delhi thousands of the traitors have found a refuge; and as the city contained immense quantities of arms and ammunition, and is defended by wall and river, it was not an easy thing to take it.

Delhi is one of the most ancient cities of India; according to tradition, it was founded 300 years before the Christian era. When possessed by the Hindoos, it was called Indraprastha, and Hastinapore, and also Delhi. This latter is the name by which it is now universally known in Hindostan. It lies on the right bank of the river Jumna, and is about 900 miles from Calcutta. It is a walled city; and the distance round the walls is not less than seven miles, while their height is, on an average, upwards of 30 feet. The wall is said to be built of grey granite. At the foot of the wall is a glacis and a wide ditch, and at intervals are strong stone bastions. It has seven gates, called by the names of the principal places or countries to which the roads through them lead.
