his duty requires humiliation and injury That the Christian must recognize the divine ownership of each and every talent intrusted to him, was another point brought out by Mr. Brown. He said that looking constantly forward to the time of judgment should encourage the Christian to work in developing his talents, so that he will be able to present them acceptable to his Creator. He then went on to speak of the rewards which come to a Christian who develops his talents. The first he mentioned was divine recentified. who develops his talents. The first he mentioned was divine recognition, to have God say on the great judgment day, "Well done, good and faithful servant." Another reward which he mentioned was promotion from power over a few things to power over many things, or an enlargement of capacity for work capacity for work.

Mr. Brown concluded by mentioning joy as one of the greatest rewards for Christian service—the joy of feeling that God is well pleased with us.

In a few well-chosen words the pastor bid farewell to the congregation, saying that he would leave it to them to judge with what fidelity he had labored among them, and that the success which had at them, and that the succes which had attended his ministry would only be made known in eternity. He pointed out that his leaving was not a matter of his own choice, but simply his duty, in keeping the pledge he had taken when ordained to the ministry of the Method st Church. He in-
