

WARNING!

THE MUTO convertible coat, as illustrated above, was patented in Canada on Sept. 8, 1908, and this patent is controlled by the Lowndes Company, Limited, Toronto. It is a broad one and covers every feature of the improved collar that distinguishes this coat from all others.

The MUTO coat has made a tremendous hit, and reports have reached us of attempts by custom and wholesale tailors to copy the garment or make something similar and offer it as the same as the MUTO.

This is to warn the public that the genuine MUTO coat bears the MUTO 20th Century Brand label. It is a difficult coat to make correctly, and must be made exactly as patented to be satisfactory.

We desire to caution the trade generally, custom, wholesale and retail, against making or handling any infringement of this patent, and to call attention to the fact that any person who sells an infringement is an infringer equally with the manufacturer.

The MUTO coat is sold only by ourselves and 20th Century Brand agents, and in their interests and our own we will be obliged to proceed sharply against any infringers.

See this wonderfully clever and useful garment and beware of unsatisfactory imitations.

It is a dressy fine weather coat and an ideal garment for stormy weather or for motoring or driving. Collar can be put up or down in ten seconds.

Commission Merchants Sue Glasgow Firm For $16,462.

Justice Riddell is hearing a case in the non-jury session of the court to-day long way towards giving the real reason why the sales of Canadian apples in the old country have fallen away during the past year or two.

The action, which deals with apple packing, is brought by R. S. Lang & Co. of Toronto, commission merchants, against L. H. Williams & Sons, fruit dealers of Glasgow, Scotland, for $16,462, made up of $4,622 claimed as unpaid commissions and $10,000 damages for the alleged breach of contract.

The Scottish company have entered a counter claim for $30,000, made up of $35,000 for loss of profits, $10,000 for breach of contract, and $10,000 shrinkage in unpacking. Their principal claim is for loss of profits.

In 1906 the Glasgow firm, thru their local agent, Robert Muir Shaw, made an agreement with Lang & Co. to pay them 15 cents a barrel commission and the costs of purchasing and packing large consignments of apples. A stipulation was made by the Glasgow house that the apples were to come up to a certain grade. The Lang company say that last year Mr. Shaw refused to accept parcels of consignments, and as a consequence the cost of packing and buying was thrown back upon them, thus injuring their credit thruout the country and rendering them unable to meet their liabilities.

In defence the Glasgow people say that the apples shipped were poor and that they were packed in such a way as to make them unmerchantable. They also claim that Lang & Co. agreed to sell only to them, and that they violated this agreement by selling to a New York firm, thus preventing their own sales. The case involves 50,000 barrels of apples.

Bert Van Horne of New York, a big apple buyer, was a witness during the afternoon. He has big orchards all over the country and has orchards in California, Oregon and Ontario, with a capacity of 100,000 barrels. He also had a contract with the Glasgow house for 10,000 barrels, and told his men to pack them American fashion, "best on top." He felt sick, and when he was able to get around again, he investigated the packing and found that only 100 barrels graded No. 1, and there were a great many culs. The contract was canceled on Nov. 15, 1907. He said Canadian apples sold last year to Christmas as high as $9 a barrel for the best.

At the conclusion of yesterday's hearing Justice Riddell smilingly told the disputants that court did not open till 10.30 this morning, and that he thought they could get together and settle the dispute in the meantime. Some of the points have been sent over to the master at Osprey Hall to decide upon.
