Prince Charlie. When Your Child is Awakened by Croup

By BURFORD DELANNOY.

(Continued.) Any Chantrelle was greatly dis- pleased. The Chantrelles were poor- Both brother and sister were well- favoured; each looked to marriage as a little lust in which the stars of life might be weathered. They inclined to the belief that Percy was a favorite with Mrs. Seton-Carr. Now that she was a widow, there was hope, a very strong hope too, in their hearts that she might be induced to change her name to Chantrelle. As a matter of fact, they were coming to England for the very purpose of trying to induce her to do so. The Seton-Carr bank balance they had imagined her life fairly well-to-do, but when they saw in the newspapers the amount which her husband's estate was sworn under for England, home and beauty, they promptly packed and set out for the island. They were greatly startled by what they heard on the boat; what Dick said of the position Masters was hoping to fill. The disturbance rapidly shaped into indignation; they looked on it as an endeavour to take the bread from out their mouths. The pleasant voyage had looked forward to was not without its unpleasant moments. "Never mind, Percy," the sister speaking to her brother one day. "Give a clear field, you will go in and win yet."

ter that kind of love, if there's anything more outwardly temperate, like yourself. They are apt to judge of the surface. "Thank!" "Oh! It's true; we don't want to mince words. That's where the average woman makes a fool of herself; where your chance comes in. Masters is worth fifty of you, but there are scales to balance or register values of that kind." "Thank again!" "Oh, we know it, you and I. We can speak to each other without putting foot on the soft pedal. He has a nature which would make him stick to a woman till, literally, death did them part. Yours is of the type which would prompt thoughts of a separation at the moment the woman's bank balance ran out." "And you?" "He could not resist the mere; she had fingered a sore place. But he did not hurt her this time; she owned up at once." "Cast in the same mould? I did not mean blame to you. My own glass- house prevents stone-throwing. I was merely stating facts. I would not have them otherwise. Men like Masters are profitless in this world. When virtue is its own reward, the reward is usually small to be seen with the naked eye. I have a have a distinct preference for qualifications which are otherwise." Percy smiled. Was full of admiration point for his sister. She was the stronger of the two; he ever recognized that; she continued bitterly. "Virtue is all very well for women; it may serve her purpose. For a man it is a useless luxury." His own non-possession of it made him smile again; she went on. "As you don't seem inclined to take the initiative I shall do so myself. Before we reach Wivernese, Mabel will have received a letter from me. I am going to write it ready to post at the first port we touch. It will go by the overland route." It did.

CHAPTER XXIX. Aching Hearts and Laughing Faces. The composition of the letter to Wivernese needed all the powers Miss Chantrelle could bring to bear upon it. They were in no way of a mean order. She did not, however, grudge time or labour; the expenditure was in a good cause; Percy had been on the matrimonial stocks too long; his was the kind of heavy which was withered rather than ripened. A little sigh of content escaped her when, at last, she had finished writing. Leaning back in her chair, the end of the penholder between her lips she read: "My dearest Mab, - Isn't it a tiny little world? Just fancy - my brother and I are coming back to England on the same boat your brother is travelling by. Dear old Dick! He looks so strong and well; better, I think, than I have ever seen him look. With him is Mr. Masters - oh, of course, I ought to congratulate you, oughtn't I? - but I will leave that till I see you. It is a good job you are not of a jealous disposition, Mr. Masters is such a dreadful first! He has been most popular with all the ladies on board, and made violent love to me within a twenty-four hours of meeting me! He did not succeed in my case, though (not because of you, my darling Mab, because I had not heard of your engagement to him then) but I do not like a man who makes love to every woman he meets, when you are engaged in odd parts of the boat engaged in conversation with some pretty girl, generally a different one each time. But there, I must not say anything against him, or you will never forgive me. Besides, if you don't mind it, what does it matter? Of course, there's no real harm in what he does - don't you? - but I want to insist that, it is the last thing I mean - as the girls must know he is only flirting; perhaps he is heart is with you all the time. How beautiful it must be to have such a gift that way. You must be very fond of him if all he says is true; that you do on the ground he walks on, etc., etc. Asked if the marriage day had been fixed, he replied that that only rested with himself. Fancy that! Aren't the men growing dreadfully cheeky? Your brother has asked us to come down to Wivernese for Christmas. I never saw a man go so awfully white as Percy did when he heard of your forthcoming marriage. I had had no idea that you had had no idea that he - but there, that would be telling tales out of school. We are coming to spend Christmas, unless, dear Mabel, you would rather we did not. If for some reason we did not, just now, wire to us, care of Charing Cross shall quite understand that it is not convenient just now. You know what a dear, impulsive boy Dick is; he absolutely insists on our coming; says you will be really pleased to see us. I do hope so, darling. I have a recollection of many, many happy days spent with you. With all my love, Believe me, dearest Mabel, Your ever true friend, AMY." As she folded the letter and directed its envelope she muttered: "I think this puts a spoke in Prince Charlie's wheel! If I know anything of Mabel's pride, this won't ensure the pleasure and the warmth of open arms and the warmest of welcomes for him." She hesitated a moment, then laughed, continued: "There is no scrap of fear of my letter ever being produced. Her pride would not allow her to do that, and she overruns with it." Any Chantrelle was a clever woman; that fact has been recorded. In addition to knowing what to say and how to say it she correctly foresaw the effect it would produce. Her study of womanhood was a very close one. The letter sent to Wivernese carried all its intended evil. The descent of a bombshell could not have had more disturbing effects. Mrs. Seton-Carr was simply furious. Amy had not relied on the belief in the proverb was justified, throw enough mud, some of it sticks. The letter was read over and over again. Each time an effort was made to dispel its contents, each time the bad impression became deeper. Apart from the letter, if she had not cared for the man. That was the weak point. Not a day passed without her thoughts being full of him. The letter came as a blow; a blow of the severity which she felt in her natural fatigue brother-in-law. This to Mrs. Seton-Carr could only fit as a confirmation of her friend Amy's letter. Pride and a readily aroused temper usually battled together with conspicuous success. Mabel was brought up to such a pitch of excitement that she positively cried. To think that this man - who looked in her heart of hearts like a loved one - should have the affrontery to talk of her so!

And Gamps Frantically for Breath You will be Grateful for the Suggestions Given here and for the Curative Powers of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. No mother forgets the first time she was aroused from sleep by the distress of her child with croup. Nor does she forget the helplessness she felt in not knowing what to do to bring relief from the desperate struggle for breath. The first indication of croup usually comes about midnight, when the child is suddenly awakened by a paroxysm of suffocation and a dry, harsh, ringing cough. There is no time to call a doctor and to prevent suffocation the spasms must be broken up at once and the false mucus removed. This can best be accomplished by use of an emetic, such as a teaspoonful of alum in sugar or syrup, mustard in warm water or a teaspoonful of warm lard. In the absence of these remedies vomiting may be caused by tickling the throat with the finger. Then Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine should be given every hour or two in doses varying from ten drops to a teaspoonful, according to age; for otherwise, even though the child may appear well during the day, croup will return with equal or greater severity during the second night, or develop into what is known as true croup, a very fatal disease. By using Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, the cough is kept loose, the inflammation is reduced and the croup is entirely cured in two or three days. Sometimes there are symptoms of croup observable when the child goes to bed, such as hoarseness or feverishness, and in all such cases croup can be entirely prevented by frequent small doses of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. Being composed of simple and yet powerful ingredients, and being sweet and pleasant to the taste, Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine is especially suited to the needs of children, and readily taken by them. It has won its way to the heart of every mother who has used it, and finds its place as an indispensable medicine in the great majority of cases.

PRODUCTION OF "X RAYS." Interesting Interview With Dr. G. G. Corbett of St. John. Of all the apparatus employed in the practice of medicine and surgery, probably none has attracted more universal attention than that used in the production of X-rays, which, although of comparatively recent origin, has been brought to a very high standard of perfection. This is particularly true of the Heintz high frequency X-ray cabinet, one of which has recently been installed in the office of Dr. G. G. Corbett of this city.
