

AMERICANS AND FRENCH CLASH OVER FRANCO

RESENTMENT OF U. S. DOLLAR POWER SHOWN

Blows Freely Exchanged in Restaurants With Visitors
POLICE CALLED TO QUIET INSURGENTS
Populace Apparently Venting Its Anger Against Sightseers

By JOHN O'BRIEN
United Press Correspondent
PARIS, July 21.—Americans and Frenchmen battled early today in the restaurants and night clubs of Montmartre, where the French franc is scorned and champagne is obligatory. There apparently was an organized offensive of disgruntled Frenchmen, impelled either by a boogaloo in fact or genuine resentment against the purchasing power of the dollar.

Blows were exchanged freely with hundreds of vacationing American college-bros quick to rise to the necessity of the occasion, although they knew scarcely a word of French and therefore could only surmise that they were being addressed as "dirty Americans."

Some Englishmen inevitably were caught in the general swinging of fists, but it was against the dollar, not the pound, that the French were crusading. The French invaded places where prices were marked in dollars, or their equivalent, yielding their resentment and clamoring for cheap drinks.

THE ROW STARTS
"The French cannot afford champagne," they shouted at the Americans.
"Only the dirty Americans can buy it."

The diplomatic talents of the various proprietors, whose sympathies and business were entirely with the Americans, proved to be ineffective for purposes of peace. The hundreds of American college boys who always may be found in Montmartre on Sunday nights and mornings did not hesitate, and the Montmartre crowds were eager for a fight and the chance to get a good one. The police might provide for seizing a handful of bills.

A riot on the Rue Fontaine was the scene of the first battle. The custom there is 80 per cent. American, and into the chain came the rowdies, rushing the dance floor and sweeping the dancers and waiters to one side. A flying wedge which forced the waiters to the door quickly was formed and outside they fell into the hands of a squad of bicycle police of which there were scores patrolling the district in anticipation of just what happened.

AUGER AGAINST FOREIGNERS
The Parisian populace generally is venting its anger against foreigners and eight-centers were particularly exposed to insult or attack. Tourists were repeatedly hooted and the police were compelled to interfere to save them from man-handling.
Three American students, Charles and John Cooley, brothers, and a cousin named John Cooley, of Hartford, Conn., were attacked and manhandled by a crowd in Mont Parneasse, but were rescued by the police.

MARITIME CLAM PROBE OPENED THIS MORNING

thriving self-governing colony, accepted in good faith these representations, and was one of the four original provinces which formed the Dominion of Canada. We abandoned our career as a separate colony so that we might assist in creating a great Canadian Nation and work out our destiny within that nation for its benefit as well as our own.

RESULT INEVITABLE
"As will be shown, this province has at no time since 1867 been treated as an equal participating partner of the Dominion. The result has been inevitable.

"Because of our geographical position, the problems of the east and are a different nature from those of Central and Western Canada. Our bonds are difficult to overcome. In other words, we are on the edge of a widespread nation with our scope of commercial activity within that nation on one side of us only, and being a maritime nation, we are in a position to develop our growth upon lines which other provinces have not. We have the power and ability to direct our own growth upon lines which other provinces have not. We have the power and ability to direct our own growth upon lines which other provinces have not.

"Thousands upon thousands of young men and women have left our province for the sole reason that the United States or the Canadian West afforded brighter prospects. Our social and commercial influence, which was at the time of Confederation an outstanding feature of the province, has dwindled into comparative insignificance.

PROSPEROUS BEFORE UNION
"It is desirable to emphasize that previous to Confederation we were a prosperous and growing province. Since Confederation, the situation has been gradually, yet steadily, reversed. There is no doubt that had we remained united as we previous to our entry into the Confederation been implemented, our history subsequent to Confederation would be very different to what it is. But had no such assurances been given it surely is the part of wisdom of a federated government to ensure that all the members of a federated body are sound and healthy.

"We, accordingly, say that our demands as a partner in Canada must not be ignored. The condition peculiar to this province must be given consideration by the rest of Canada. We believe solutions are possible, and definite suggestions in this regard will be made in presenting this case many of which will be made to direct benefits which through Confederation have accrued to other provinces of this Dominion. Of necessity our economic position as a province of Canada, will be compared with that accorded other provinces. Throughout we shall discuss many features which in detail are peculiar only to this province and in certain phases require consideration and treatment without regard to precedent.

NOT JEALOUS OF OTHERS
"But I wish to make it clear, that this province is not complaining of the benefits enjoyed by any other province of Canada. We rejoice in their success and achievement. We are simply interested in their future welfare.

"Only in such instances as injustice are clearly manifested do we ask that adjustments be made which may of necessity directly affect certain provinces of Canada. Where we have not received or are not receiving equitable consideration, we shall specifically ask for relief. In so far as Confederation has placed us in an artificial economic position, we shall ask, wherever necessary, that artificial measures be applied which will adequately meet the situation.
