He did not come before them asking to be forgiven for any act of mission or commission; he was not going to beg them to return him once more, because he felt he did not need orgiviness, as he had done nothing of which he was ashamed. No, he took higher grounds than that, he asked them to return him because they could not send any other man to fill his place. The position which he held as the leading Catholic in the Domnion of Canada, and Speaker in the House of Commons, was not only a credit to himself but it reflected credit on the constituency which he epresented, and that they should be roud to send such a member. And now he would allude to some other matters. He had heard rumors of opposition. This was strange in such cases as the present. It was an unusual thing to be opposed and especially in this case when he had been specially singled out through the received him with open arms, and was she going back on her record now?
