NOT TOO LATE.

She was seven, I was nine;
I loved her madly, and she knew it,
I knelt and begged her to be mine,
She said she really couldn't do it.

At thirty-eight her hair is gray.
Her roses brighter bloom than ever;
To-morrow is my wedding day;
'Tis late, but better late than never.

PROF. GRUMBLES COLD.

At the time it happened Prof. Grumble was nursing a cold. After the loss of his voice, which went into retirement during his engagement with the cold, he whispered with great vehemence several times that he would rather nurse twins than care for even a moderate every-day sort of cold, to say nothing of a genuine Georgian Bay cold. It must be considered in this connection, however, that the professor was out of temper, and that he had never had any experience with twins; therefore we are not bound to accept his opinion in this respect without question.

The point to be borne in mind is the fact that he was nursing the cold, and that while he was in the act of doing it, Dr. Squibob came to call on him. It was not a professional call, made under the protection of the great seal of a medical college at so many dollars a visit, medicines extra, but a call induced in part by friendship and in part by curiosity. It was made because the doctor felt in a measure responsible for the cold, and feared evil consequences from the rival doctor across the street. He suspected the rival of a weakness toward hot baths and little pills, so there was a little harmless guile mingled with the charity of his morning call.

He felt responsible for the professor's cold, because it was taken in the course of an experiment suggested to him by the doctor. He was always suggesting something to the professor in the way of an experiment, and promising to help him to carry it out, and was always being called away to visit some patient at the critical point in the experiment, and this always resulted disastrously to the professor; but, then, he never charged the professor anything for prescriptions. The present cold came in the course of some studies they were jointly engaged in, which necessitated the use of a large refrigerator. While the professor was inside the refrigerator mixing some strange and new and bad-smelling combination of chemicals the doctor stood on the outside noting the state of the barometer and thermometer and waiting the professor's signal to open the door of the refrigerator. At a most interesting point in the proceeding the doctor was called away to attend a woman who had become entangled in a telephone wire without permission from the authorities.

This new and interesting case distracted the mind of the doctor from present business, and, after tacking a notice on the door of the refrigerator that he would return at nine p. m., he went away, leaving the professor safely locked up. The interest pertaining to his bad cold would have been entirely lost in the story of his strange and startling death but for the fact that Mrs. Grumble had lost a hat pin. She had been looking for the hat pin for a week and had found the point of it in the last batch of home-made bread. She was losing sleep and flesh under pressure of the idea that some of the family had eaten the hat pin and would be obliged to suffer the horrors of vivisection before it could be found. The head of the pin was nearly as large as a door knob, and even a goat would have rebelled at its flavor; but Mrs. Grumble did not think of this, and went around distractedly looking in every conceivable place for the lost hat pin.

In her wanderings, she thoughtlessly opened the door of the refrigerator, and the stiff and chilly form of the professor tumbled out, upsetting her and creating a storm of consternation in her breast.

"Lord have mercy on us!" she screamed. "I do believe he's dead."

The professor was to all appearance, dead. A coroner would have pronounced him dead; and Mrs. Grumble not knowing any more than a coroner, placed her hand to her back hair, drew out a hat pin with a large knob and no point, and jabbed the end into the professor's left leg. Now, he was not dead, but some of his faculties were in suspension; so, when the pin stuck him, he kicked violently at the refrigerator and made an incoherent remark about "trimming somebody's toe nails," and went to sleep again.

Mrs. Grumble was greatly alarmed at this; and, not having the address of a manicure about her, she went out to hunt up a policeman. At the end of an hour she found the policeman; but, by that time, she had forgotten what she wanted, and could only think of her trouble about the hat pin, which she related to him, to his great and increasing amazement. He thought she was crazy, and consulted his book of rules to see what should be done in the emergency. The result of it all was that by the time she returned the professor was groaning in bed under the care of Mrs. Grumble's favorite niece, as will be explained in its proper place. The policeman, not seeing his way clear to arrest anyone, and not being instructed to do anything else, went away as far as the corner of the street, where he twirled his club for an hour and watched a hole in the sidewalk, and thought how easy it could be fixed if there was anybody in creation whose business it was to fix it. Dr. Squibob being absent, his rival was called in, presumably at the instigation of the favorite niece. This much is necessary to a clear understanding of the matter, and will be read with interest by those who like to get at the heart of things.

It was also stated that while Mrs. Grumble was hunting the policeman, her favorite niece called at the house and found the professor in the deplorable state above described.

Upon her rested the responsibility of calling the young doctor; but it was an emergency that must be promptly met, and, though the professor thought himself the deadly enemy of Dr. Pilule, he was in no condition to object at this time, and, after his condition improved, he saw something in the blue eyes of the niece that warned him to keep quiet. He did not fear Mrs. Grumble, for he knew that, no matter how strenuously she might object to any proceeding, she would forget all about it the next moment, in her anxiety to find something she had lost.

It is to be hoped the reader now clearly understands how Dr. Squibob happened to call upon the professor at this time. The niece was there, with her hair in a delightful state of fluffiness. Her disposition to antagonize Squibob and favor Pilule was increased from the fact that Squibob, secure in a plethora of patients, always asked her why she didn't comb her hair; and Pilule, with subtle wisdom, complimented her upon her taste in arranging it.

Squibob lost ground here, as he deserved; and Pilule—but that is a matter to consider hereafter.

The rosy-cheeked niece gracefully offered the doctor a chair. He seated himself in a comfortable position, glanced suspiciously around, sniffed the air, and said with a tone of contempt in his voice:

"Camphor! little pills! foolishness! Prof., why didn't you send for me before you got so bad? They always wait till they're dead before they send for me. They never give me half a chance. It's a wonder I've any reputation left. Why didn't you send sooner, I say!"

The professor whispered from beneath the flannels:

"I didn't send for you, Doc. If you'd come back in decent season and unlocked the refrigerator, I'd have stood some chance to send for you. I was too stiff to send for anyone when Rose found me. She and Pilule brought me around with a hot bath."

"I didn't lock it, Prof. It must have locked itself; and as for that Pilule, I can't express my opinion of him. I've no opinion to express about Pilule. He's too far beneath my notice to express anything—"

"Dr. Squibob!" exclaimed Rose, in a sweet but indignant voice, "Dr. Pilule is my friend!"

"I beg pardon, Rose," replied Dr. Squibob; "but it's a wonder Prof. isn't dead from shock. Out of a refrigerator into a hot bath—and little pills, too, and camphor and cold cream. It's strange he isn't dead. It's lucky I called just when I did. How'd you come to get Pilule?"

"Rose did it," whispered the professor. "She thought he was a good man—"

"She thought, did she!" interrupted Squibob. "What right had she to think in this case? It's a wonder you aren't dead. Let's see your tongue."

"Dr. Squibob, said Rose from the other side of the room, where she stood with her eyes ablaze and her fluffy hair trembling with indignation. "Dr. Pilule is such a nice man! And he has lots of patients—and he cures 'em, too. It don't become you to criticise Dr. Pilule—you, that lock men up and freeze 'em to death in refrigerators. Don't let me hear any more of it, Dr. Squibob."

"Don't talk to me about Pilule. I don't approve of Pilule. Your uncle might have been dead if I'd been a little later in getting here. Let me see your tongue." This latter remark was addressed to the professor and not to Rose.

Nobody knows what Rose intended to say after this, for Dr. Pilule had been quietly standing near the door for some time, and, hearing Rose's warm defence of himself, thought it time to appear in his own behalf.

At sight of Dr. Pilule, Rose went into a spasm of crying and laughing and fell in an hysterical fit straight into his arms. There is no suspicion of premeditation in this occurrence, and the only strange thing about it was that, though hysterics were something of a speciality with Pilule, it took a very, very long time for him to deal with Rose's case; and, by the time he had restored her to tranquillity and a feverish complexion, Squibob had departed without saying a word to anyone.

Owing to the loss of the professor's voice, it is difficult to obtain minute particulars of other things that transpired; but neighborhood rumor says that the lovely niece and Dr. Pilule arrived at some sort of understanding during the hysterical period, and that in consequence many mysterious packages have begun to arrive at the residence of the niece, most of which are only suitable for wedding presents. It further says that among the best of these packages are some marked "From Squibob," and that Squibob and Pilule were seen to shake hands on the street, in the face of the great public, with apparent cordiality. All this is incredible, and can only be believed when the professor recovers his voice from the refrigerator and confirms the truth of the rumors.—Peterson Magazine.

Mixed Metaphor.

A certain politician, lately condemning the Government for its recent policy concerning the income-tax, is reported to have said: "They'll keep cutting the wool off the sheep that lays the golden eggs until they pump it dry."

"The glorious work will never be accomplished until the good ship Temperance shall sail from one end of the land till the other, and with a cry of 'Victory' at each step she takes, shall plant her banner in every city, town and village in the United Kingdom."

An Irishman, in the midst of a tirade against landlords and capitalists, declared that "if these men were landed on an uninhabited island, they wouldn't be there half an hour before they would have their hands in the pockets of the naked savages."

Only a few weeks ago, a lecturer at a big meeting gave utterance to the following: "All along the untrodden paths of the future we can see the hidden footprints of an unseen Hand."

A Toronto speaker recently declared his desire to "make men think, and not to drift along in the mental atmosphere like so many logs."

"We pursue the shadow, the bubble bursts, and leaves the ashes in our hands."

An orator, at one of the University unions bore off the palm of merit when he declared that "the British lion, whether it is roaming the deserts of India or climbing the forests of Canada, will not draw in its horns nor retire into its shell."

The Care of Shoes.

When shoes are taken off they should be aired until they are thoroughly dry both inside and out. Then they should be wiped off with soft cloths so that no dust or dirt will remain on them. After that they should be stuffed with tissue paper and laced or buttoned, in order to preserve their shape.

An Unusual Experience.

William Cox, of Monticello, Ky., ate his New Year's dinner at a table around which sat three of his living wives, two of whom he had divorced.
