THE SUFFRAGISTS AND THEIR CAMPAIGN IN BRITAIN

Trials and Tribulations of the Leaders in the Movement
Which is Arousing Widespread Interest

(Copyright, 1907, by W. R. Hearst.)

LONDON, March 5.—The sayings and doings of the women who want the vote is the topic of the hour. The great procession last Saturday was an argument that it was difficult to refute, as to whether women desired to be enfranchised or not. Through the mud, the slush and the rain, the long procession wound its way to Hyde Park, and there was no doubt that women must be in earnest who could tramp through such weather and under such difficulties. Three points seemed to be clear to all who took part in the demonstration. First, suffrage must come before party and binds no party. Secondly, women are not prepared to wait for it until the question of universal suffrage is before the nation. Thirdly, that women, once accorded the vote, will be content to wait until a dissolution occurs in the natural course, exercising their power only at the by-elections. "Qui vent la fin veut le moyen," Mr. Zangwill said in his speech at Exeter Hall, and the long process of women proved that many were willing to go through any difficulties in order to arrive at that end.

There were many who had never demonstrated publicly before, but for years been working quietly for the principles of Woman Suffrage, many who disapproved of the noisy means lately used by some of their comrades, and yet one and all were imbued with the feeling that something must be done. "I hate crowds, I loathe processions, and I feel a fool, but I want the vote, and if I am at home and let others get it for me I should feel mean. I would rather feel a fool than mean," said a tired woman in the crowd. But women are beginning to learn that if they desire a thing they must put aside other considerations and make straight for the goal. The event of the day undoubtedly was the speech of the well known writer, Mr. Israel Zangwill, at Exeter Hall. "Like most simple truths," he said, "this axiom took the human race a long time to learn. Woman was a personality, a human soul, and what was more to the point a taxpayer. The last great mistake was brought in by the male half of the population in this country was the education bill, but if there was a subject in the world which women should have a right to deal with, it was education; but men managed this alone, and the mammoth fiasco which had been brought about by the education bill, was a simple case of male mismanagement.

"There is nothing particularly feminine in being ignorant of the affairs of your country," he said. "The late Queen Victoria, who had much to do with the politics of the world, was a domesticated woman. She was a woman because of her womanly capacities, and a husband and wife who wanted to quarrel had no need of politics. The tactics women adopted were called unwomanly, but they had to do dirty work. Ladylike means were all very well when you were dealing with gentlemen, but they were dealing with politicians." Mr. Kier Hardie, the labor leader in the House of Commons, was also present at the meeting, and showed his sympathy with the cause.

So far all was peaceful, but a different scene was destined to take place three days after the meeting. The House of Commons on Tuesday. They first gathered in Caxton Hall in Westminster, and then in a body they marched to Parliament. In serried ranks they proceeded across the great square, singing:

We have stormed the House of Commons,
With our little band so true,
We have frightened all the statesmen
Till they don't know what to do.
They have hung us into prison,
And we're waiting there for you;
And the cause goes marching on.

But mounted policemen who were waiting for them charged the women and broke through their ranks, and then began a scene which was unparalleled. A score or more of burly policemen, massed in front of the house, struck, pushed, kicked and hustled the women, and the wildest scenes were witnessed. It is said by an onlooker that none of the women returned the blows, except one very small lady, who dealt an impotent little cuff at an elderly constable, who had pushed her into the ranks on one side; but she was positively seized and rushed along the pavement. But the women, of course, were destined to be overcome, and fifty-nine were arrested. Mrs. Cobden Sanderson, the daughter of Richard Cobden, of free trade fame, received a brutal kick. Mrs. Despard, General Sir John French's sister, was arrested, waving an umbrella, with her motor veiling streaming behind her. She had heard of an assault on the entrance. So roughly was she handled by a mounted constable that the sleeve of her cloth jacket was torn off, and finally the women were led off to the police station, still singing "Women of England," to the old Welsh tune of "The Men of Harlech."

CABWOMEN CHEERED.

Two Parisiennes Receive Ovation From Crowd While Practicing.

PARIS, March 2.—The two Parisiennes who have been practicing as cab-drivers were today greeted, and they were cheered by crowds, which, at times, were so large as to obstruct traffic.

Mme. Duffaut drove, while Mme. Charnier sat in the cab, and the two were handled so neatly that one of the spectators remarked: "She looks like a Countess driving in the Bois de Boulogne." "That horse is in clover," said another, for Mme. Duffaut did not continually jerk the reins so many Paris cabbies do, and carried her whip for show only.

Once the traces got entangled, and Mme. Duffaut sprang to disentangle them, and put things right so quickly as to earn an extra round of cheers.

The designer lost, and he went wretchedly toward his sweetheart's home, wondering how best to inform her of her compulsory change of lovers. When he arrived, his sweetheart—a very pretty girl, named Louise—was alone. He told her of his loss, and she, in a fit of rage, drew a knife and plunged it into his breast.
