aham thought

omewhat more Irs. Graham's t vulgar from French cook a thing—it for a number Irs. Graham ver; it suited marked that between her hose whom l to herself m she, had d: a Lady en ringlets, cate comther overonourable mustache over the t himself ancholy. y much aptain in so I will e or two on sev.

he had seen any service, was very quiet and insignificant, fond of shooting and fishing, played well at billiards and piquet, liked good dinners, and frequented country houses where they grew. He was, moreover, a tall, well-dressed, good-looking man, who made himself useful as well as ornamental. The fourth was a baronet, a member of parliament, a sucking politician, aspiring to office for the honor rather than the profit of the thing, for he was wealthy; but he had a vehement conceit in his own powers, wearied the House with large-worded speeches, and not very apposite quotations in Greek and Latin; for he had lately come from Oxford, and had visited the Ionion Islands; and he was considered a very rising young man, simply because he treated the opinion of every body with contempt who did not exactly agree with the opinions which he formed himself, or which he was instructed to maintain.

To this gentleman, Sir Arthur Green, Mrs. Graham was particularly attentive and gracious; and, indeed, she had reasons of her own for being so, though he did not know them. In person he was exceedingly diminutive, except about the hips, which had been intended by Nature