lish though outnumbered, inflicted terrible losses on the enemy and suffered severely themselves. At the end of the four days, what remained of the fleets returned to their respective ports to refit. The Dutch soon put to sea again with 80 regular men-of-war and 23 fireships, and in 1666 appeared off the mouth of the Thames. Not until the 25th of July did the English and Dutch come together. until the 25th of July did the English and Dutch come together. The English for once were nearly equal in power to the enemy, having 80 sail, besides 19 fireships, under Prince Rupert and the Duke of Albermarle. On the approach of this armament, the Dutch drew off, as if intending to bear away for the coast of Holland; but were overtaken by the English fleet near the north-eastern extremity of the coast of Kent, at the bold promotory known as the North Foreland, which, Eyelyn tells us, was then sur-

motory known as the North Foreland, which, Evelyn tells us, was then surmounted by a pharos of brick, having on its summit an iron cradle, in which a man attended to a great fire of seacoal when the nights were dark.

There Sir Thomas Allen with the White Squadron began the battle about noon, by attacking the squadron of John Evertzen, Admiral of Zealand and Friesland, who was killed, together with his vice-admiral, De Vries, and his rear-admiral, Koenders. The fall of these and several other officers caused the squadron to be routed; and

But I did not feel that I ought to patronize a man who would have imposed something else on me had I been less guarded, and declinded two others, the Captains Nyhoff and Hogenhoeck, lay bleeding on their decks, mortally wounded. Discouraged by these and other losses, De Ruyter's squadron began to make sail, his vice-admiral, Van Nes, alone remaining by him, 'hough' very much 'lisable' and wrecked aloft.

Being at length deserted by all but eight ships, this brave seaman was compelled to make all the sail he could and follow the rest. Prior to this, Van Tromp, the Admiral of Amsterdam, who, says the historian of the United Provinces, 'commanded the rear-guard of the Dutch, and fought like a madman rather than a wise commander:' had engaged with great spirit and bravery the Blue squadron, under Sir Jeremiah Smith. 'He had broken through it, and gained a few advantages, but indiscreetly permitted himself to be drawn to such a distance from the rest of the fleet that it was no longer in his power to assist De Ruyter, who, on finding himself pursued by the Red squadron, the bowchasers of which were never a moment idle, deemed it more noble to serve his country by the preservation of her fleet by skiil and management, than to idle, deemed it more noble to serve his country by the preservation of her fleet by skill and management, than to seek revenge and death; and it was not long before he reached the shallows on the Dutch shore which, in those days of indifferent maps and charts, rendered the the task of pursuit too perilous for Rupert and Albermarle to think of attempting.

In the protracted struggle with Van Tromp, his rear-admiral, Hoen, was killed, and the vice-admiral, Van Meppel, had his ship knocked almost to pieces, whilst 100 of his men were killed and wounded.

The Dutch Admirals De Ruyter and Van Tromp accused each other of wounded.

It is given by Pepys thus; Fourteen ships taken, twenty-six burne and sunk; two flagships taken, with 1,200 prisoners, not then sunk. Taken in all, 6,000 men.

Off the North Foreland, 1666.

In our last we gave an account of the protracted naval fights with the Dutch, which after a deplorable series of losses of men and ships on both sides and unprecedented carnage left England mistress of the seas. Not for long however was her title undisputed. On Jan, 19, 1666, France declared war against Great Britain, and one of her first acts was to fit up and send to the English coast a fleet of 36 warships beside war galleys and fireships under Admiral the Duc de Beaufort.

The Dutch saw their opportunity to inflict a blow on England, and a fleet of 76 sail was collected to help the French to drive the English of the seas. The Dutch were under De Ruyter, Everezen and the younger Van Tromp, Admiral of Amsterdam. The English, after providing convoys for her merchantmen at sea were unable to collect more than 74 sail to meet this formidable force.

On June 1, 1666, the English and Dutch sighted each other off Dunkirk on the French coast, and then ensued four days' destructive, bloody and determined fighting such as the world had never before witnessed. The English though outnumbered, inflicted terrible losses on the enemy and suffered severely themselves. At the end of the four days, what remained of the fleets returned to their respective to the fleets returned t

A Barefaced Fraud.

The following, clipped from the columns of the Toronto Globe, Oct. 29th, is of sufficient importance to newspaper readers to warrant its reproduction in these columns: To the Editor of The Globe: Sir,—I am sure you will agree with me when I say that something ought to be done to stop the barefaced swindling (no milder name will do) which is going on in certain directions in our midst, and I have no reason to doubt that my experience in this city is the experience of these in mean warts of Capada. I of others in many parts of Canada. I have read so much of the great success of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People mounted by a pharos of brick, having on its summit an iron cradle, in which a man attended to a great fire of seacoal when the nights were dark.

There Sir Thomas Allen with the White Squadron began the battle about noon, by attacking the squadron of John Evertzen, Admiral of Zealand and Friesland, who was killed, together with his vice-admiral, De Vries, and his rear-admiral, De Vries, and his rear-admiral, De Vries, and his rear-admiral, together officers caused the squadron to be routed; and the Zealand, carrying the flag of Vice-Admiral Blankart, was taken and burnt, together with the Sneck (or Snail), another Dutch ship of fifty guns.

By one o'clock the Duke and Prince Rupert made a furious attack upon De Ruyter; and after a three hours' williams' Pink Pills for Pale People that I determined to give them a trial for nervous troubles. I accordingly went to a drugstore to procure a supply on asking the druggist for the pills he took down a glass jar and proceeded to take out the quantity, "But," said I, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are not sold in bulk, and that cannot be them," o, yes, it is," said the dealer: "we always get them in bulk and sell them that way," I had read the caution of the proprietors to the effect that these pills were never sold in bulk, and thinking they should know best, I declined taking them, and left the store. My next experience was no more fortunate. Again pills pink in color to imitate the genuine, were offered me. When I remoistrated this dealer admitted the pills were not supplied him by the Dr. Williams' Co. but declared that that they have a procured a supply on asking the druggist for the pills for nervous troubles. I accordingly went to a drugstore to procure a supply on asking the drugsist for the pills for nervous troubles. I accordingly went to a drugstore to procure a supply on asking the drugsist for the pills for nervous troubles. I accordingly went to a drugstore to procure a supply on asking the drugsist for the pills for nervous troubles. I accordingly went to a dru By one o'clock the Duke and Prince Rupert made a furious attack upon De Ruyter; and after a three hours' engagement, with cannon and matchlock, in which they were roughly handled, they were compelled to leave their ship and go on board of another. Abermarle and Rupert, encouraged by the success of the White squadron, redoubled their fury with the Red against that of De Ruyter, each ship singling out an adversary, and lying alongside of her almost muzzle to muzzle. In this conflict a Dutch fireship was sunk, and the Guelderland, 66 guns, one of De Rnyter's seconds, so mauled as to be unfit for further service. Her bulwarks and masts were torn away and her guns silenced.

The captain of an English fireship attempted to grapple with her, but miscarried, and was forced to set his perilous craft in flames too soon. Another Dutch fireship was burned by the English, and her crew, having to throw themselves overboard, were drowned.
