Prospective purchasers of windmills will doubtless be interested to know that the

Chicago Aermotor

is erected upon a four-post mast, as per illustration. This is the latest improvement in masts, and is used only with the Aermotor. It is constructed out of 4 x 4-inch material, for the 12 power mill, bolted together with 4-in. blocks between. To one set of these blocks the angles of steel which encase the shafting are attached. These steel angles are also an exclusive Aermotor idea. By blocking the mast solid above the roof the shafting may be protected from the weather. This mast allows the mill to pivot directly over the shafting. The material may be found at any lumber yard at a very nominal cost, while single pieces large and good enough for a solid mast are expensive and difficult to obtain. The Aermotor four-post mast is easy to construct, requiring practically no cutting or fitting. A bent steel stub tower four feet long is sent with every mill free of charge, fitting snugly over the mast and connecting directly with the mill. Bear in mind the labor-saving qualities of the Chicago Aermotor, and ask for our Windmill Book.
