Wedding Bells

BROUND—ROBERTS.

(Sydney Record). The Jubilee Methodist Church was the scene of a quiet but very pretty wedding on Sunday afternoon at half-past five when the marriage of Annie Mousdale, daughter of Sergt. and Mrs. Harry C. Roberts, to Mr. Ernest Mather Bround, R.N.C.V.R., took place. Rev. J. W. Bartlett officiating. The bride, who was given away by her father, looked charming in a travelling costume of navy blue with large white hat and black fox furs, the latter the gift of the groom, and carried a sheaf of white carnations. Miss Gladys Marshall, in a costume of brown cloth with hat to match, and carrying a bouquet of pink carnations, was bridesmaid and Mr. Harry Broughton, R.N.C.V.R., was groomsmen. After the ceremony the bridal party went to the home of the bride's parents, where only the immediate family and friends were present. Mr. and Mrs. Bround left on the evening train for a short honeymoon at the groom's home in Brantford. On the train which Mr. Bround will join his ship. The bride was the recipient of a great number of very beautiful gifts. The groom's gift to the bridesmaid was a coin purse and to the groomsmen a pipe.

BORDEN AND ROWELL RECEIVE A GREAT OVATION IN MASSEY HALL

Premier Opens Ontario Campaign With Vigorous Speech—More Liberals and Labor Men to be Added to the Cabinet Montreal Wholesale Exemptions Will Not be Allowed to Stand

By Courier Leased Wire

Toronto, Nov. 22.—"I want this to sink into the heart and mind of every man and woman in this country; it will matter little to us or to our children after us as to what happens to the fortunes of any individual or any political party, but it will mean much as to whether the effort which we have made in this war is to be successful or not. For if the people of the enemy nations are not taught that war is not a profitable enterprise then we will have fought in vain, and more than thirty thousand Canadians who lie beneath the soil in France and Flanders will have died in vain. I firmly believe that the purpose of the Canadian people as expressed by their voice on the 17th of December next will affirm in uncertain tones that that sacrifice has not been and shall not be in vain."

In these words, ringing out like a challenge to the great audience facing him, Sir Robert Borden, speaking in Massey Hall last night, wound up a masterly declaration of government policy. And from every corner of the great auditorium in a tremendous burst of applause came the assurance that the Prime Minister had truly gauged the sentiment and the determination of the Canadian people. The opening of the Ontario campaign in Toronto last night must have given comfort and inspiration to Sir Robert Borden and his colleagues. The weather could hardly have been worse, the rain pelting down steadily all evening, but long before the opening of the meeting a cordon of police were busy turning away the hundreds of people who had to be denied admission. Inside the hall every seat right to the last row in the top gallery was occupied. The place of honor was given to some two hundred returned soldiers, who held the front rows on the ground floor, and the crowd showed its temper by standing and cheering while some of the khaki-clad heroes, arriving late, hobbled in on crutches.

Upon the platform were many of the leading men of all ranks of life, both Conservatives and Liberals, and the strongly represented Sir William Hearst and practically the whole Ontario Cabinet were present. Representatives of the city council, the churches and the bench rubbed shoulders and mingled freely. Among them were scores of returned soldiers.

To Sir Robert Borden was accorded such a reception as he never received in Toronto in the old days—and the Prime Minister has had more than one roaring welcome from his supporters in the first city of the province. When he entered the building the thousands in the hall stood up and cheered him time and again. The women, of whom there were hundreds present, waved their handkerchiefs with an enthusiasm that rivalled that of their men-folks.

A Convincing Address

The Prime Minister's address was a characteristic effort. It was a measured, convincing recital of events leading up to conscription and the formation of a Union Government. There was no appeal to passion, no attempt to stir up racial feeling, no set one part of the Dominion against another. His references to conscription were couched in reassuring terms, but beneath them could be seen that the speaker was determined to see that come what may the men at the front will not be left without support. Sir Robert repeated his earlier statement that there was no thought of calling out the married men or single men except those in categories A. He held out to those who feel that just claims for exemption have been refused the opportunity of having their cases reviewed and injustices removed, but at the same time he declared with considerable emphasis that the Government will not tolerate exemptions en masse.

"The Government," he said, "is taking good care to see that appeals are taken out on its behalf against those exemptions which may be based upon wholesale or indiscriminate exemption."

The Prime Minister did not mention Quebec, but the crowd apparently interpreted his words as an assurance that the wholesale exemption Quebec would not be permitted to stand, for the declaration was received with enthusiastic applause.

Sir Robert spent some time in dealing with domestic problems having relation to the war, and the audience cheerfully pledged that in the necessities of life would not be permitted to pile up huge profits. He reviewed the radical measures the Government had already taken, and declared that when the new Government was relieved of the extra burdens the present campaigns was placing upon them further steps would be taken to guard the people against exploitation.

Mr. Rowell in Fine Form

Hon. N. W. Rowell roused the audience with a fighting speech, in which he made short work of the attempts of the Laurier-Liberal element to pillory Unionist Liberals as deserters and renegades. "We are the real Liberals," said Mr. Rowell. The former Liberal leader in Ontario did not attempt to make a defence on behalf of the Liberals who had joined Sir Robert Borden's Government. None was necessary. Mr. Rowell declared that the men who had joined Sir Robert Borden in a Union Government were the very men who would have formed a government had the Liberals been returned to power prior to the present crisis.

The mass meeting last night not only endorsed Union Government by its enthusiastic applause, but it went definitely upon record. With a striking demonstration of approval, the great audience accepted a resolution moved by Sir William Hearst, and seconded by ex-Mayor Thomas Urquhart, a life-long Liberal, expressing full confidence in Union Government under the leadership of Sir Robert Borden, and calling upon patriotic citizens everywhere to rise above party considerations in order that the country might do its full duty to the men at the front.

Norman Somerville was the first speaker of the evening, and he made an eloquent and effective appeal on behalf of the Victory Loan. In introducing the Prime Minister of Canada, J. R. L. Starr, who presided, he said that if at this time last year, anyone had told him he would stand on a platform with so many Liberals, he would not have believed him. "The Liberals on the platform," he said "are just as loyal to Canada and the British flag as the Conservatives, and as solid behind Sir Robert Borden as are the members of Sir Robert's own party."

"The man who brought this union about is on the platform," he said, and the audience again wildly applauded Premier Borden. "He has succeeded in uniting the forces of Canada in the war," said Mr. Starr, and again Sir Robert was cheered. The chairman referred to the great patience with which Sir Robert had negotiated for Union, and declared that if a modern nation were to rewrite the Book of Job he would be content to be relieved of the great and patient figure who for years had directed the destiny of Canada.

"The Major"

BY RALPH CONNOR

In the manner of The Sky Pilot and The Man from Glengarry, Ralph Connor tells this story of a Canadian young man through boyhood, school days, college days, frontier days, in a country and a world at peace. Suddenly that liberty into which he was born was threatened, the rights of small nations and of the individual were challenged. The citizen became a soldier.
