AN OCEAN CEMETERY.

THE MOST DEADLY TRAP FOR SHIPS IN ALL THE WORLD.

Bare, Bleak and Treeless Quessant the Notorious Island of Terror, and the Awful Forests That Supply I with Wood In Plenty.

Far out in the Atlantic ocean, off the northern French coast, almost due west from Brest, lies a great rocky island that is one of the most deadly traps for ships in all the world. It is the island of Quessant, the notorious Ile de l'Epouvante, the island of terror. Bare, without a tree to break its monotony, it lies in the path of the ships seeking the English channel. If they steer too far north, the hundred shoals and reefs of the British coast open their jaws for them. If they sail too far south, Quessant reaches for their Bleak and far away from any other land as the island of terror is, it still has its population. What mysterious thing is it which attracts that popula tion and makes it cling? The infre quent visitor sees funny flocks of little sheep, scarcely twice as large as hares. He sees small herds of rough coated ponies almost as tiny as the sheep. These are the only signs of productive industry to be seen. There is fishing of course, but fishing can be prosecut ed better from the mainland, with less risk and a more convenient market.

What is the mysterious attraction, then? So asked Alexander Shuette, the traveler, when he made his way from the coast of Brittany to Quessant. The answer came, at least in part, one evening when a great storm swept in from the Atlantic and beat at the shores with unexampled fury.

He says: "The daughter of my hostess led me up the narrow staircase to my room. As I ascended I noticed, without remarking the oddity of it at he time, that the staircase was of shining oak. I was ushered into my room, a large, low chamber, complete ly paneled from top to bottom. Putting the lamp on a huge oak table that shone like a mirror, she said: "'If you should need more firewood, monsieur, you will find it in the next room. Do not spare it. It is bitter cold, and there will be more than enough firewood in Quessant in two or three days. Good night.'

"I sat down before the blazing fire and prepared for a cozy evening. The storm raged in the narrow streets of the little village. The surges thundered against the granite breast of the coast like andless artillery fire, and sometimes I imagined that the very island trembled under the onslaught of the hundreds of millions of tons of

"As I sat listening I gazed into the flames. The wood struck me as strange. And then I wondered. On the entire island there is not a single tree, and wood. 'There will be more than enough in two or three days."

"I arose and opened the door into the next room. That room was possibly 20 feet high and was filled almost to the top with timber. First with wonder, then with growing awe, I gazed at the piles of wood. Truly she was right, the little maid, when she said that one need not be economical with firewood on the Island of Quessant There were timbers of every shapesplintered masts and spars, planks from decks and sides, remnants of a steering wheel, benches from the forecastle, yellow, black, brown, white and five per cent additional from red woods, even two figureheads, some bright, as if they were new, some crusted with shells and hung with seaweeds. In the entire room there was not a piece of wood that did not come from some wrecked ship. "When I returned to my room, I took the lamp and examined the place closely. I noticed a strange, delicate, yet very insistent fragrance sandalwood. Thick wooden pillars supported the ceiling. They were of a beautiful dull black-ebony, as I lived. The panels were rosewood, mahogany and cedar. Even an unpracticed eye could see that all these precious woods once had ornamented the cabins of noble ships. The heavy carved chairs, the polished oaken table, even the bed in which I was to sleep, all came from shipwrecks. "Now I understood the meaning of the words 'stand rights.' In favor of this island, far away from the world harness, mile heats except 2:50 and murderous for the ships that the class, which will be 1/2 mile the world together, Bolus, with his bride of the winds, is more fruitful than is Ceres to the mainlands, with "The forests of Quessant! Are there such others in the entire world, so unique, so terrible? This forest, instead of trees, has the mighty masts of ships, In that tremendous forest are the oaks and pines of Canada and Maine, the cypress of Florida, the baobabs of Africa, the teak of Hindustan, the ebony and sandalwood of South Amerwill be refunded; also the right lea. Family of the Aged Monarch of Denmark Represented by 21,000,-000 Square Miles of the World's Territory.

This week one of the most remarkable "family gatherings" ever held in Europe assembled within the walls of Fredensborg Castle, Copenhagen. There the venerable King Christian entertained a number of Imperial and royal visitors from different parts of the world, most of whom are his own children and their relatives by mar-King Edward and Queen Alexandra, the Czar and Czarina and their four children, the Dowager Empress of Russia, the Queen of Greece, the King of Sweden and Norway, the Duke and Duchess of Cumberland, were all pre-King Christian is not only the oldest sovereign (he was born in 1818), but he may be justly described as "the fa-ther-in-law" of Europe. As father of Queen Alexandra, the Dowager Empress of Russia, the King of Greece, the Crown Prince of Denmark (who married Princess Louise, daughter of the late King Charles XV. of Sweden) and Prince Waldemar, whose wife was the Princess Marie of Orleans, the King of Denmark has links with the chief families who rule the nations of Europe.

Although Denmark proper is little more than twice the size of Wales, the King's family are represented by close King's family are represented by close upon 21,000,000 square miles of the world's territory. markable gathering of crowned heads and their families are taking place, is one of ten royal palaces, all situated within a few miles of Copenhagen. Fredensborg was a favorite visiting place of the late Emperor of Russia and the Empress. The room which the Czar used on his last visit is preserved exactly in the same state as he left it, including a plain, commonplace writ-ing-table, which the Emperor one day bought at Copenhagen. After his ter-rible death the late Queen of Denmark took a great dislike to the castle, and it was left untenanted for a consider-King Christian conducts his home life on michodical, perhaps almost ri-gid, lines. His Imperial and royal guests rise not later than eight o'clock and breakfast en famille. Walking, cycling, or driving is indulged in until one o'cock, at which hour lunch is partaken of. Then more open-air exercise, probably a long excursion in a char-a-bane, which the King himself, if he should feel equal to the exertion, may drive, as his Majesty is an excellent whip. The younger members organize lawn tennis matches, a game much favored by the present Czar.

At seven the royal visitors sit down to dinner in the "Dome Room," the largest and handsomest apartment in the castle. It can seat seventy-five guests. The floor is, or was up to quite recently, covered with an immense Turkish rug, a present from the Czar. The guests later adjourn to the "Garden Apartment" for coffee. At ten o'clock tea is ready for those who care for it, and by shortly after eleven everyone will have retired. King Christian attributes his excellent health in his advanced age to the early hours and regular habits he has always adopted. His rational, careful living was a thing his father insisted

When the late Queen Louise married Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein Sonderburg-Glucksberg there was ne apparent likelihood of the bridegroom ever becoming a reigning Sovereign. Gossips of the time thought that the me bride "might have done bet ter." She was, however, deeply attached to the Prince, despite his poverty. So poor indeed were they that the Princess had to adopt all the housewifely devices of a lower station to make the slender income suffice. It is untrue, however, that the Prince acted as drawing-master, a story which has

The late Queen Victoria, on the en-agement of the Prince of Wales to the Danish beauty, sent over for a photograph of the Princess' boudoir, thinking in her kindly way that the bride would probably like a room in her own home furnished in the style she had been accustomed to. Great was the dismay at Copenhagen on the eccipt of this message, for the acconmodation in the house had never al owed Princess Alexandra such a luxary as a room to herself! The genial and unassuming nature of the aged King is well known. Despite his venerable age, he may be seen on most fine days walking unattended, save by a huge boar-hound, through the streets of his capital, making little purchases at the shops and chatting in a most unaffected way with people he nay meet, and these are often persons of very humble station.

One morning he entered into conversation with an old courtier, whom he eventually invited to partake of refreshments. The two adjourned to a nearby restaurant, but when the time came to pay, the King found that he had no money, and had to borrow the necessary wherewithal from a friend who opportunely entered the restaurant. Another morning the King espice ant. Another morning the King espied a number of men congregated on the esplande. They were laborers on strike for a reduction of hours and an increase of wages. On his approach the malcontents recognized his Majesty, and their spokesman explained the situation to him: The King was not entirely aymenthatic. He armed the entirely sympathetic. He argued the various points of dispute with them for over an hour, pointing out that the manufacturers of Copenhagen were not so prosperous as the workmen ap-peared to imagine, and that to grant the strikers' demands would mean the dealing of a serious blow at the indus-

No one would for one moment think of neglecting a disease so dreadful in its results as nervous

The time to act is when vitality begins to wane, when there are loss of system: 50 cents a system: 50 cen tries of Denmark. The men were not convinced, but they expressed their thanks for the advice—which they did not intend to adopt—tendered them by his Majesty in such a kindly and well-meaning way.

His Majesty was greatly attached to the late Queen Louise. One morning during her illness it was remarked that his Majesty looked fatigued. He admitted that he was. It appeared that the King had been in to enquire how the Queen was. Her Majesty complained that she could not sleep, and asked the King to allow her to rest against his arm. In this way rest against his arm. In this way she at last fell into a deep sleep, and for fear of awakening her the King remained in his tiring position several hours.

King Christian is more than popular with his people. They are devot-ed to him. This is all the more remarkable when it is remembered that Denmark is probably the most Socialistic country in Europe.
