MAPLE GLEN

A very successful concert and supper was held in the school house at Maple Glen, on July 11th, the proceeds of which will be given to the Y. M. C. A. to help in the good work they are doing among the soldiers on the firing line.

The concert was a credit to the young members of the Patriot Club, by whom it was planned and carried out. The following is the program, every item of which was heartily applauded by a delightful audience:

- Chorus—O Canada
- Recitation—On the Field of Honor
- Dialogue—Britannia and Her Children
- Recitation—The Column of Relief
- Dialogue—The Humors of Education
- Recitation—Edith Cavell
- Dialogue—Trouble in a Mormon Family
- Tableau—Little Jim
- Recitation—Aunt Jemima's Courtship
- Song—Keep the Home Fires Burning
- Dialogue—Getting Ready
- Recitation—Little Boy Blue
- Reading—The Taking of Langtun-pan
- Tableau—The Coming Man
- Recitation—Alameda
- Dialogue—Goin' Somewhere

The audience was greatly pleased with the fine music supplied by a phonograph, for the loan of which the Club is greatly indebted to the members of the Wireless Garrison, of Newcastle. They wish here to express their warmest thanks to these friends for their kindness.

There was a very good attendance, but not so large as it would have been, had not so many been prevented from coming by the dangerous condition of the Mill Stream bridge, which would be impassable at night. The proceeds amounted to $26.50 with expenses to the Club amounting to only $2.00.

The entertainment was closed by all joining heartily in singing the National Anthem.

Nervousness Cured by Mental Arithmetic "A Canadian Girl," writes us from Moncton, as follows:—For anybody who is troubled with nervous attacks of the "blues," etc., mental arithmetic is a great thing. Rules in arithmetic followed out, take the mind off the worries of life and prove rather interesting, too. This can be done while at some kind of work or in spare time and after going to bed at night. One single rule, which may be a little difficult at first, is: take the numbers from 1 to 1,000 and multiply them first by 2 and separately by the other numbers up to 10 or 12. This can be done twice and the figures from 1,000 to 2,000 may not be found too difficult to multiply in the same way. There are numerous other rules which may be used, if preferred, or for a change.

Men are probably more forgetful than women because they haven't so much gossip to keep them in practice.

The Progress of the War

Since the first of June, the Russian armies have been steadily gaining over the Austro-Hungarians and Germans, along the whole battle front from the Pripiet River southward to Romania. The fighting in June was almost entirely with the Austro-Hungarians. The latter were surprised, driven in disorder out of the strong forts of Dubno and Latak in Russia, and across their own border, being compelled to evacuate their own province of Bukowina and a considerable portion of East and South-east Galicia. The Austro-Hungarians lost about 250,000 in prisoners. This month the advancing Russians have met the German army on the Stokhod River, a southern branch of the Pripiet. The Teutonic allies withdrew their forces, on or about July 12th, to the west bank of the Stokhod, where under General Von Linsingen they have chosen to make a stand to cover the fortress of Kovel and Southern Poland. The Austro-Hungarian armies further south, have halted the Russian advance in the Eastern Carpathians and in front of Lemberg.

Altogether, since June 1st, the Russians have taken a strip of territory almost as large as New Brunswick. While the Russian drive was proceeding against the Teutons, the Turks were able to expel the Russians from the vicinity of Bagdad and follow them into Persia, where they have lately recovered Kermanshan. But the Russians who hold Turkish Armenia have been able to advance a few miles further westward from Erzerum.

On the western front, the British and French held all they have won in their recent advance from the River Somme to the North Sea. The Germans are still attacking Verdun, which is now their only offensive.

A large part of Arabia, including the holy cities of Mecca and Medina and their seaports, has successfully rebelled against Turkey and declared its independence.

All along the line, except at Verdun, the Entente allies are steadily gaining, and the enemy's gains in those two sectors do not appear of sufficient importance to seriously affect the final result.

MODERN RAPID FIRE WEAPONS

For many years, one of the first requisites of a fire arm has been rapidity of discharge. A number of years ago this feature was first emphasized in the pocket pistol. A revolving chamber was mounted in position to allow each of its chambers with the pistol barrel and mechanism was provided for automatically rotating the chamber with each pull of the trigger, so that the shots could be fired as rapidly as the trigger could be pulled. Later, a somewhat different mechanism was used in the place of the rotating cylinder. This enabled more shots and greater speed. This later mechanism was applied to the army rifles. Then came the machine gun which literally grinds out the bullets. It is really an army rifle, slightly modified and fitted with mechanism for feeding whole strings of shells to the barrel, so rapidly that the shots are made at the rate of more than ten per second.

Now, the revolver principle has been applied to the firing of torpedoes from submarines, so that three or four torpedoes may be discharged in rapid succession, and still still, the same principle has been applied by England to one of her most recent types of field guns. This new gun with the revolver construction has a range of more than ten miles and can fire so rapidly that six shots will be in the air at the same time. Great numbers of these new guns are being used by England in her great drive. It is little wonder that Germany has to give way before an irresistible storm of shell. Thus, the death-dealing power of a rifle, revolver, torpedo, or field gun has been greatly multiplied by the repeating action applied to all of them.

A Republican Germany

(Summerside Journal)

Rumors from the interior of the central powers of Europe become more and more ominous. The present successes of the allies on the western front combined with the astonishing advances of the Russians on the east and the subsequent progress of the Italian troops in the Trentino must have its effect upon the German population. The fiction of a conquering Kaiser overwhelming his enemies must gradually become apparent to his deluded people. Whether they will understand the truth lies with them.

The soldiers in the trenches indicate by their easy surrender that they are having their eyes opened. An officer with 150 men told his captives that he thought they would be of more use to Germany after the war than dead in the trenches. This is a sign of returning reason. When the German nation awakens to some degree of sanity it will begin to see that the only thing to be done is to take the allies at their word, and abandon the frightful policy to which the house of Hohenzollern has committed them. If they get rid of the incubus and its sister iniquity in Austria, the German people will find the Allies easy to deal with.

It is not the German people but the abominable system of their Kaiser and his clan that has created the enmity of the world for Germany. A republican Germany, or a Germany under any form of democratic government which would give the will of the people free play and put an end to autocracy in every shape, would see a speedy end of the war. It would be possible to negotiate with a free people, but never with the Kaiser. For him there is only one fate, and that must be dictated by the allies at Berlin.
