A Detective Story.

The weest thing I think I ever aid was to arrest a man in church. I took him right off his knees. It was a funny case there had been a systematic series of burglaries from the cars of the Pennsyl vania road, the robbers doing their worl in such a manner that it baffled the detectives. A whole carload of fine shoes had been side tracked at the city, and while there a case of fine shoes had been atolen from the car. There was no clue to the thief, and although we suspected the members of a pretty tough there was no proof. One morning I saw one of this gang walking along the street and I thought I d get close to him, for it struck me he had a new pair of shoes on He got onto me and popped into a church. It was Sanday morning and the church was crowled. He went in and knelt down near the door and I saw the bottoms of his shoes, with the mark of the company that had shipped the stol Lebber see. You remin' me ob her so slapped him on the shoulder and took him outside. Then I placed him under arrest and he gave the entire gang away so that we had no difficulty in breaking it up for good - Tom Furlong in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.
