Cold Storage.

In view of the Cold Storage Act, passed last session, giving extraordinary concessions to two American citizens of Portland, Maine, it will be of interest to our readers to learn that fishing merchants in the States who handle fishery products in Cold Storage, are much put out by what is known as the Hayburn Cold Storage Bill, now under consideration by the Committee on Manufactures of the United States Senate. A committee representing those affected is looking after their interests.

The following extracts from their case as given in the New York Fishing Gazette should prove interesting:

"The committee directly represents and speaks for producers of salt water fish in all the Atlantic Coast States and on the Pacific Coast; practically the entire wholesale, producing and distributing trade of Fulton Market, New York; T. Wharf Market, Boston; Dock Street Market, Philadelphia, and Portland, Me.; a portion of the concerns engaged in the production and distribution of halibut and salmon on the Pacific Coast; and for practically all the freezing and cold storage plants on the Atlantic Coast, whose entire business is founded on the salt water fish industry."

"The salt water fish industry does not oppose the Hayburn Bill as a whole or the general principles thereof."

"We favor regulations requiring specific and detailed reports at any and all times by cold storage warehousemen and the trade generally, showing the quantities in cold storage, the length of time in storage, etc., and we favor general publicity with respect to these reports."

"The Hayburn bill, however, contains five distinct provisions all vital to our industry, any one of which if enacted into law in its present shape will either wholly or partly destroy the industry. None of these provisions as at present drafted can be of any benefit to the consumer, and will, in fact, work as much harm to the consumer as to the producer. Broadly speaking, these provisions are as follows:

- (1) Fish, or the manufactures or products thereof, cannot be held in cold storage for a longer period than three months.
- (2) Any article of food held in cold storage for any period, moved from cold storage, and returned again to cold storage, shall be deemed to be adulterated.
- (3) No article of food once frozen in cold storage shall be sold or offered for sale except in a frozen condition.
- (4) Any article of food which having been once frozen has thereafter been thawed so as to alter its appearance and make it resemble a fresh unfrozen product, shall be deemed to be adulterated."

A Sad Case.

The case of James Shea who was taken to the Lunatic Asylum from his residence at New Water St. last evening is a sad one. He was living there by himself and the surroundings were most squalid and miserable. His mother and aunt who lived with him did not long ago and he was left to live alone. He went out on the roof of Mr. Connolly's house adjoining last evening with nothing on but his shirt. He would probably have jumped off but for the fact that he was seen by a store neighbor and captured him and made him put on his clothing.

Caught Trout With a Diamond.

Jack London Tells Wondrous Fish Yarn.

Lake Crescent, Wash., July 9.—Tucked snugly in the heart of the Olympic Mountains in Northwestern Washington is Lake Crescent. The chief attraction at present is the author, Jack London. Just why Mr. London chose this region for an outing when the rugged mountains, the Sierra range, are near the author's Californian home, is because of a desire of his sporting blood to respond to a new call of the wild.

In Lake Crescent around the renowned Beardslee trout, found nowhere else in the world. To feel the tug of one on the end of a casting line and to caress its spotted sides, brought London here to spend five weeks.

He came here with the avowed intention of remaining until he had captured a Beardslee trout. For four days he went out in the morning and rowed back at night, ate his meals and retired to his tent. Not a word was said. Guests saw him bring in strings of fine speckled and Dolly Varden trout, but not a Beardslee.

Among the guests is Alexander Pantages, who learned of London's great desire and planned to play a little trick on the author. One morning he approached London at breakfast and offered to bet him $195 against all the money London had in his pockets that he would not catch a good Beardslee trout during his stay.

London found $3, and they left the money with the innkeeper. In the flat bottomed boat assigned to each guest, London rowed across the lake, fully five miles, and fished all day. His boat was fairly swamped with various species of trout and some landlocked salmon. But in spite of 47 changes of flies and three hours of trolling, not a Beardslee trout even made a strike at hooks and spoons.

Suddenly the author was seized with an inspiration. Selecting a wondrous well made trolling spoon, London took his diamond pin and tied it to the gut leader, an inch above the cluster of hooks, and then bent to the task of trolling the placid waters of the cove. Hardly had the hook touched the water when a strike and a tug of the line assured the author that a fish was hooked. Fish and man fought a battle for 15 minutes. In the end the man won. Soon in the stern of the boat lay a beautiful spotted trout, 34 inches long and weighing about nine pounds.

About dinner time London carried the prize to the veranda, where guests had assembled, and displayed it, remarking that a fine mounted specimen it would make. Then he walked to the clerk's counter and pocketed the $195. It cost Pantages another $50 to learn how the trout was caught, as the author told of the diamond display on his trolling spoon. "And it's no nature fake," said London, "for there is the trout and here is the diamond stud."

38,000 Volts Didn't Kill Him.

Marquette, Wis., July 7.—Thirty-eight thousand volts of electricity passed through the body of Max Engles at High Falls yesterday, and he is still alive. While fishing in the rear of the power house, Engles touched one of the power wires with his steel rod. He was knocked unconscious and for some time it was feared he was dead.

Applicant (overwhelmed).—And shall I have to clean that?—London Taitler.
