Harbor Grace Notes.

Messrs. John Mercer and Levi Wells were amongst the passengers who went out by Monday morning's train for the city. They were to take passage to the Rosalind and Digby respectively en route to the United States.

A special Easter programme was held at Coughlan Hall, the Methodist Sunday School, by the scholars Sunday last, 8th inst., and was most enjoyable. The programme consisted of exercises, a duet by Amy Simmons and Winnie Hinton; Recitations by Jennie Goodwin and Don Smith. The Superintendent, Mr. Robert French, performed the duties of chairman, who gave an opening address. The Rev. Dr. Fenwick, Supt. of Missions, St. John's, delivered a very interesting address to the school, as did also Mr. Harris. Quite a large gathering was present. This special day at the Sunday School was also connected with the Thanksgiving Service and the showing of the photograph of Rev. Lawrence Coughlan, held in the church at the evening. (mention has been made of the latter previous to these notes.) Misses G. Parsons and M. ... the day school teacher, are to be complimented on the splendid programme given for the scholars did indeed present a good showing, to the delight of their parents and friends.

Misses Marie Norris and Josephine ... of the city, spent a while with the guests of the former's uncle, Mr. M. P. Stapleton. They returned to the city by Wednesday morning's train.

The different teachers and pupils who were here from the city and elsewhere spending Easter with their parents and friends, have resumed duty during the week.

The ferry boat which had been stopped running since the harbor froze over, has, now that the thaw is come, resumed its service again.

Mr. Robert Tetford, Jr., has opened a sausage store, in the building immediately west of that occupied by Mr. Martin Sheppard. Mr. Tetford is manufacturing his wares locally, and is in connection with the business of Mr. Henry Coffin, St. John's. Bob is a returned soldier, one of the Blue Puttees, and should receive the patronage of the general public, which we feel sure he will get. We wish him every success in his undertaking.

Miss Queenie Hinton went out to the city by Monday's train to study at the Methodist College. Mrs. Hinton accompanied her to the city. —COR. April 11th, 1923.

Out They Go on May the 3rd.

The people are being awakened to the country's serious condition and the danger of Coakerism. They have determined to end it all on Polling Day by returning to power the Bennett Party. His policy of equal rights to all must appeal to every fair-minded man. His expressed desire to restore confidence in the country's trade and industries will appeal especially to the fishermen and laboring classes of the country who have been so seriously handicapped and hampered by Squires and his associates. His promise to support all industries that will help to build up and restore the country to its former prosperous condition will set at rest the silly cry that the Bennett Party will destroy the Humber proposition. We may take it for granted that Bennett and those associated with him will readily encourage the influx of new capital into the country and the building up of additional industries provided the country is not called upon to pay too big a price for the privileges to be given. It is in this particular that security is required. It is in this that strong determined business men of experience are required in order to weigh carefully the conditions submitted in order to decide in the best interests of the country as to the proper policy to pursue. There must be a dark corner in the Humber Deal that Squires and Coaker are determined to keep from the knowledge of the people till they get their votes, otherwise they would under such a hail of strong provocation from the Opposition have made known to the people all the details of the contract before this. We need new industries and they should be encouraged in every possible way, but the people are of the opinion that the Government before pledging the country to the terms should candidly submit them to the public before asking them to vote for the carrying out of contracts of which they know nothing. All the details, clause by clause, should be analyzed in parliament so that the country may get a square deal. The country wants labor badly, but in our desire for labor it would be a mistake to put a millstone around the country's neck that would keep us slaves for ever.

The "Slacker" Party.

PREMIER SQUIRES AND THE SOLDIERS.

He Appoints "Slacker" Member to a Fat Job on the Pension Board.

During the last General Election, Sir Richard Squires sought the aid of the returned soldiers and no words were too flowery to paint their "exquisite self-sacrifice," and no promises too great to make "the boys who by their sacrifice, their achievements and death have made the name of Newfoundland famous and won for us a place of honor in the world's record." But that was when Mr. Squires wanted their votes. Then he petted them, said nice things about them and made them all kinds of pledges—but it was only words. He was as sincere in his compliments as he was in his promises; and the proof of this is found in his insulting remark to a widow of a gallant captain of the Royal Newfoundland Regiment who laid down his life on July 1st, 1916, that "the soldiers did not go across to fight because they were inspired by any sense of chivalry or patriotism but for the money that was in it." The story of this callous insult was told by ex-President Harold Mitchell at the G.W.V.A. meeting on June 18th 1920, and that it raised a storm of indignation is not surprising. Newfoundland has been and is justly proud of the achievements of her soldier and sailor sons, but it has remained for one who occupies the position which he debases and disgraces, to insult those who have served and returned from the weary years of warfare, but the memory of the splendid lads who so nobly gave their lives for their country in the struggle. Such reflections on the patriotism of our soldiers calls for the strongest condemnation and every man who donned a uniform in the time of crisis should know what to do with Squires and his candidates on Polling Day. The spirit which animated Premier Squires in this insult to the memory of the brave men who fought and died for Newfoundland in the war is still strong within him. He seems to have gathered to him every slacker in the country. In any other country the knowledge that a leader, himself within military age at the time of the War but who did nothing all through the years of the struggle, had gathered about him a party of slackers, would mean that an indignant public would rise en masse and hurl him and his slacker followers into oblivion, and we hope that in Newfoundland the electorate will do the same on May 3rd. But the list of slackers is not complete until we take in his two slacker editors, Mosdell, of the "Daily Mail," and Cloutier of the "Advocate." Cloutier has felt it necessary to minimize public contempt for the slacker class by pleading that he volunteered but, being a teacher, was given leave of absence; but Mosdell cares for nothing except place and pay. During the years of war he gave no service whatever and now Squires' reward to him is to put him in on the Pension Board at a huge salary. As for Cloutier, his pitiful excuse should not weigh a minute. Why should a teacher get leave of absence any more than any other class, and what sort of a spirit did the young man have who volunteered and then was willing to accept leave of absence because he was a teacher? We call upon the returned soldiers and sailors and their relatives and those of the men who gave their lives overseas, to do their part on Polling Day by voting against the "Slacker Party."

KING TUTANKHAMEN.
King Tutankhamen is dead.
They've opened wide his tomb—
With costly things his couch was spread,
With treasures rich his room.
Goblets of gold and rare design
Stood at his royal side,
And jewels from an orient mine
Proclaimed his earthly pride.
Death must have smiled to see them
Bring
Such glittering splendore there,
As if their cold and silent king
The crown of pomp could wear.
The king had slept for centuries
Within his treasured grave,
No richer, for his draperies,
Than was his humblest slave.
