

ANNABEL

THE TEMPTATION.

CHAPTER XIV.

MRS. LANGTON DEVISES A SUBLIME PLOT, WHICH MEETS THE APPROBATION OF BARNARD HAYES, AND OPERATIONS ARE BEGUN TO CARRY IT OUT.

There was a singular resemblance between Mrs. Langton's maid, Ellen Matlocks, and Annabel. In height, in complexion, and even in features they were wonderfully alike, and in certain positions or at certain distances one could easily be mistaken for the other.

As her duties kept her in close and frequent attendance on Mrs. Langton, the latter might have had opportunities of noticing Ellen's gradually increasing weakness and the difficulty she had in doing her work, the languor which oppressed her and the sadness of spirit into which the knowledge of her state cast her.

The horrid idea was founded on the excessive likeness of Ellen to Annabel. Never had the closeness of resemblance struck her so much as now, when Ellen quietly entered to attend upon her.

Ellen started and gave her mistress an alarmed look. The unexpected observation and its probable meaning gave her a sudden pang, and caused the pain in her side to come with an intensity which prompted her involuntarily to press her hand on the spot.

"You do not seem much better," she began, addressing the girl, in a tone of kindness which no one could better assume. Ellen started and gave her mistress an alarmed look.

By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided for breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which saves many heavy doctors' bills.
