peared from her home in Hanover a tew days ago, has been found in the River Leine, near that city. The Countess undoubtedly committed suicide, though beyond the fact that she had complained of suffering severely from headaches no reason for self-destruction is known. She is the daughter of Count Adolphus Linsingen, formerly chamberlain of the Court of Hanover in the days of King George. She was 38 years old and unmarried.

Beatification of Columbus. Rome, June 28 .- It is stated that the Pope's next encyclical will beatify Columbus. The beatification is the pre-Columbus. The beatification is the pre-liminary step toward canonization. By beatification, Columbus would be declared blessed, but his relics would not be ex-posed. One great stumbling block to the canonization of Columbus is found in one particular chapter of his life. While he was staying at Cordova in the autumn of 1487, he fell in love with a lady of good birth but in poor circumstances. His son Ferdinand was the issue of this intimacy, but whether their relation was sanctified by but whether their relation was sanctified by but whether their relation was sanctified by the church is a matter of considerable doubt. It is certain that Columbus never recog-nized her in any way. He recommends her in his will to his son Diego as "a person to whom I have been under great obligations, and my conscience is burdened respecting her."

she is, to bring about a relaxation of the tension between Germany and Russia, and it was her influence alone that led the Muscovite ruler to atone for his past discourtesy to Emperor William by visiting the latter at Kiel.

It is the Duchess to whom belongs the credit of having negotiated the marriage between the Crown Prince of Roumania and her eldest daughter, Marie—a matrimonial alliance that will contribute more than anything else to the penceful settlement of the ever-smoldering Eastern question. For a time the Czar declined to give his consent to the marriage of his favorite niece to the Roumanian heir-apparent, who is a member of the Prussian house of Hohenzollern, but at last he has yielded to his sister's arguments and signified his approval of the match. The latter gives universal satisfaction, and is regarded as a powerful guarantee of peace in connection with the Balkan difficulty. It invests the court of Bucharest with ties of close and intimate relationship with that of Russia and of Great Britain, which cannot fail to impart strength and solidity to the hitherto perilous Roumanian throne. It also please the Roumanian people, who, being of the orthodox Greek faith, are giad to find in their future queen a princess of the same church. For, while the sons of the Duke of Edinburgh are brought up as Protestants, his daughters, according to the terms of the marriage contract, are educated as members of the Greek Church.
