"Pierre!" 'Monseigneur'

"Monseigneur?" "Stop this horrible jolting. I am afraid madame is very ill." The mules were brought to, with what would have been a jerk had it not been for the slipperiness of the road, which nearly brought the leader to the ground, sure-footed as he was. "Tell me, Pierre-when shall we really get to Les Vacheries? Are we certain to get there?" The other no longer answered, "As-

get to les valuents. Alle we certain to get there?" The other no longer answered, "As-monseigneur pleases." "If it please God," he said instead. "Cannot we get on faster, at any rate?". "Impossible, Monsieur le Marquis." After some little difficulty the heap of cloaks and straw was partially thrust aside, and a man emerged from the cart and stood by the side of Pierre. His costume was but little, if at all, better than that of his guide; but, even so, the distinction of his appearance was in distinction of his appearance was in keeping with what his voice had prom-ised. He was as obviously a gentleman as Pierre was a peasant. "Pierre," he said, in a low volce, "un-less we can tind help, madame will die. The cold, the fatigue, are too much for

The cold, the fatigue, are too much for her strength, and she is in terrible pain, besides. You know this country-is there no house, no chalet, nearer than Les Vacheries? No cottage—" "None that madame could reach. Les Nacheries is the nearest, by the road." A cry came from the cart, and the marquis ran to its side. "Good God!" he exclaimed. "my wife is actually dy-ing! Let us push on, for heaven's sake! I will walk by the cart; and push on faster, in heaven's name!" But this was by no means so easy. The faster, in heaven's name!" But this was by no means so easy. The snow, which had till now impeded their feet only, was now so thick as almost to blind the eyes both of mules and of

They almost plunged forward; but in a moment came to a stand their but, in a moment, came to a stand, their feet and ears thrown forward and their bodies strained back and trembling. A low, wild moaning was heard, far more terrible in its sound than that of the swollen river. "What is that, Pierre?" asked the marquis, instinctively laying his hand on the pistols that he carried in his belt. "That? That is the wolves, Monsieur le Marquis.

He Marquis." He shuddered. It was not many days since the wolves of the Gironde had saved Petion from the guillotine; nor were those of the Jura, he thought, like-ly to be less merciful.

"Are they likely to attack us, Pierre?" "I hope not, monseigneur." But his one was not hopeful. "Will not those accursed beasts stir?"

"They must stir, monseigneur, unless we make up our minds to wait till we have the snow for a blanket."

"Then push on once more." Again the mules were urged into action -this time by means of something con-iderably stronger than mere words. But when they once stirred it was not their fault that the progress which they succeeded in making was so slow: for they would willingly have galloped now, if it had only been possible. As it was, however, the travelers had to creep however, the travelers had to creep along the snow beating into their eyes, the cold numbing their limbs, and the howling of wild beasts filling their ears with its wail of terror. But still, how-ever slowly, they did make real progress. If the snow did not become so thick as to stop, their passage allogether if the If the snow did not become so thick as to stop their passage altogether—if the wolves did not surround them—if their strength did not fail—if they did not perish with cold—they might reasonably expect to arrive at their destination in time to find shelter before it was too late. It is true that the chances were in favor of at least one of these things happening, but none of them might hap-pen—and that was some comfort.

hat was some co Suddenly, however, the mules stopped once more; and this time neither blows nor words would make them move. The marquis struck and threatened them: Pierre coaxed them; but they were deaf alike to threats and to flatteries, and callous to blows. At last, leaving them to themselves, and sheltering his eyes, or rather his one eye, from the snow with his hands, the latter went a few steps forward and looked carefully before him. Then, starting suddenly back, and seizing the bridle, he forced the mules back with all his force. "Monsieur le Marquis." he said, "the will of God be done! We cannot reach Les Vacheries!" "Not reach Les Vacheries?" "Listen to that, monseigneur." The marquis listened. "I hear the iver," he said.

The other led him to the edge, soft, white and treacherous, of the descent to the river, over which the torrent was rushing headlong. Then he guided him a few steps forward, till the marquis felt the foam upon his face. "Monseigneur will stand here," said Pierre, "and press his foot against this stump, which is firm. There he will hold a cord that I shall take from the cart. By this cord I can slip down to that slab of rock just below us, and which the spray has washed clear of snow." "But, monseigneur..." "Listen, Plerre. It is only too clear that in less than two hours madame will be beyond the reach of aid. You know how ill she is-and you hear that ter-rible howling, that comes every moment nearer. I, too, cannot count upon two hours of life. But, if you are right in what you say, you say yet save the child." He did not wait for an answer, but went at once to the side of the cart and ralsed the coverings with which it was went at once to the side of the cart and raised the coverings with which it was filled. In only two ways did she show any signs of life-in the heavy and almost inaudible rise and fall of her bosom, and in the instinctive energy with which she pressed to it a young child of apparently not many weeks old, which seemed as little likely to last out the night as its mother. After gazing upon the two for an in-stant, the marquis said decislvely: "It must be done. Take the rope, Pierre."

After gazing upon the two for an in-stant, the marquis said decisively: "It must be done. Take the rope, Pierre." So saying he, not without the exertion of some force, parted the child from what appeared to be the dying embrace of its mother. Then he spread a cloak upon the snow, laid the child upon it, and tied the corners firmly together crosswise; and thea, having once more rearranged the coverings over the wowife last night at Jennings, Mont. The descent in itself was not more than moderately difficult; the only danger lay in the pos-sibility of his feet suddenly slipping upon the snowy incline, and of the marguis having to let go his hold of the rope. Neither accident, however, hap-pened; and he presently stood in safety upon the rock which, as he had said, projected across the course down which the torrent was rushing in a sheer and unbroken fall. It is true that this natural ledge did not afford him much standing room, and the height between it and the bed of the river was enough to turn any ordinary head giddy; but Pierre was mountaineer enough to be free from that weakness, at least, and to be able to prepare cooly and deliberately for the downward spring that was to land him his apprehension lowed the collision. lownward spring that was to land him beyond the torrent. Woman Recognized Her Dead Kinsman in Verestchagin's Fainting.

Chicago, Jan. 2.-A woman's voice cried "Oh! he looks like Tom!" There was commotion among a group of spectators gathered about one of Verestchagin's masterpieces in the Art Institute, and the intelligence, "She's fainted!" passed from lip to lip. The woman, Mrs. Frances Dingman, of 68 Rush street, was assisted to a seat, her face was laved and she was fanned until she regained her senses. Mrs. Dingman begged to be taken away and said she hoped she would never see a battle picture again. What has been described as the "horrid realism" of the great Russian painter's art and the resemblance of one of his characters to a cousin of Mrs. Dingman who was killed in the Philippine war had been too much for her nerves. Mrs. Dingman and a riend had been for nearly an hour iewing the Verestchagin Exhibition. In these paintings is depicted war in all its horrid details. The Philippine picture was painted by Verestchagin while he was in the islands watching the fighting of Lawton's and Mac-Arthur's men.

BERNSTEIN WON. St. Louis, Mo., Jan. 1 .- Joe Bernstein, of New York, was awarded the decision over Tommy White, of Chicago, by Re-feree Stewart today, at the end of 15 rounds of fighting before the West End Club. The decision, in the opinion of many at the ringside, was an injustice to the Chicago boxer. IN THREE ROUNDS.

Waterbury, Conn., Jan. 1.-Before 2,000 people, at the boxing exhibition of the "Do you feel quite as like a bride as you did when you married your first National Athletic Club, at Jacques Audi Jackson, of Baltimore, defeated Jimmy Handler, the Newark welter-weight, in three rounds. Handler acted like a novice in the first round. In the second he im-"Yes," she replied; "just the same. She went on to say what a nice spirit Theodore is. 'He's been in the spirit world for proved a trifle, but was clearly out-classed. In the third round Jackson sent the Newark man to the platform with a crash, and smashed him all over about 500 years now," she related. "He was a chemist and an Englishman. It was in England that he passed on." the ring.

Thus far in the fiscal year beginning April 1, British Government revenue has increased £5,400,000 over 1900, while expenditure has increased £10,-400,000.

So it will be seen that Mrs. Wil-liams' spirit husband is an imported article. One nice thing about Theodore is that he is not going to interfere with any material fancy his wife may take. She will keep her own name, and her wedding last night will not prevent her taking a material husband, if she chooses. When asked if she had another and different sort of wedding in view, Mrs. Williams blushed some more, and said that was a matter she did not care to
