They already have this machinery at the scene of operations, but upon applying for a lease of a section of the Fraser river near Lillooet, they found that this territory and all the rest of the river have already been taken up, though the leases are not being worked. It is stated that leases covering about five miles were secured by a number of persons who subsequently transferred their rights to the Fraser River Dredging Company. These leases have been in existence a couple of years. One of their conditions is that a certain minimum quantity of work must be per-
