

"You can't catch me in any of your insurance schemes," said a man lately to an insurance agent: "I'm too sharp for you fellows. I'm as sharp as a tack, and don't you forget it."

"Yes," said the agent, "but I've generally found that sharp tacks have flat heads."

Mike (on the road)—"How far is it to Christ-nut Hill, sir?"

Native—"About five miles. Whom do you want to see there?"

Mike—"Faith, I'm anxious to see meself there before night."

A gentleman once met a little girl carrying a big baby boy on a hot summer day along a dusty road. Her face was glowing with heat and her hair was blowing in the summer wind. The gentleman was struck with the romping fresh child, but thought she was overburdened. He stopped her and asked if the baby was not too heavy. She looked up through a mist of golden hair, and said, with a smile, "Oh! he is not in the least heavy; he is ma brither."

You seek protection because you want some one to share the risk with you. Is it wise for you to run the risk of losing all if one thing turns out badly? Or, is it better to secure protection such as you are able, and so, like a wise general, hold a part of your force in reserve? Some say they cannot afford to pay for this protection, as they have already more sails set than they ought to carry; they must retrench, not expand. If one cannot afford it, one cannot afford to be without it. If one is already running so close to the line that he is in fear of breakers, it then becomes imperative that he have protection. A few dollars a month will not make or break your business in any way. And, if the time comes when it will be turned into an asset, you can have the satisfaction of knowing that your family will have something. The careful man is never without more than one foothold, no matter how secure that may seem.—Monitor.
