

That the field is an almost untrodden one, and that the clinical opportunities are so very limited, must be our excuse for bringing forward such an immature and altogether inadequate presentment of the subject. We must emphasize, however, our opinion that the current views upon typhoid fever are far too cramped and stereotyped to convey an accurate impression of the true nature of the pathological processes in this disease.

BIBLIOGRAPHY.

- Banti, Archiv. Italiennes de Biol., Dec. 1887.
 Thue, Jahresbericht über die Fortschritte (Banmgarten) 1889, p. 190.
 Vaillard, La Semaine Médicale, March, 1890.
 Vaillard and Vincent, De l'infection par le bacille typhique sans lésions intestinales. Bull. et Mém. de la Soc. Méd. d. Hôp. de Paris, 1890, p. 201.
 Coupland, Enteric Fever without ulceration of the Peyer's patches. Middlesex Hosp. Rep. 1889-91, 29.
 Karlinski, Wiener Med. Wochenschrift, March 14-21st, 1892.
 Eiselt, Gazette Hebdomadaire du Méd. et Chir. de Paris, June 20th, 1892.
 Vincent, Annales de l'Institut Pasteur, Feb. 1891.
 DuCazal, Le Bulletin Médical, Paris, April 16th, 1894.
 Beatty, W., Brit. Med. Jour. Jan. 16th, 1897, p. 148.
 Cheadle, Lancet, 1897, ii., p. 254.
 Sanarelli, Etudes sur le Fièvre typhoïde expérimental. Ann. de l'Institut Pasteur, 1894, pp. 133 and 253.