sufficient legal accuracy and certainty. Although the object of the defendants might be to break the law, they considered that it was not stated with sufficient certainty. The counts ought to have stated what person or persons it was not stated with such intention was certain by a display of the such intention was certain by the first was allowed with a devout attention to those sacred strains, so much in harmony with the venerable walls within which they have of the law at leave the indust of the such intention was certain by the first was a most grievous offence. The answer of the judge therefore to the finding of the big was therefore to the finding. They have a such intention was and and not here are any errors in the finding. They have a display of the such intention was and solut not have asset forth in the indictment, and they have and the such intention was and solut not have asset forth in the indiction the such and they have a such intention counts was not sound in law, as set forth in the indictment, and had not been sustained by legal evidence. Each count charged all the flefendants with one conspiracy, and therefore there ought to have here the rest of sourcell's earliest works— served, from Purcell's own time to our own, by means of a few ought to have been only one finding. It was not competent to find some of the defendants guilty of some part of the charge, and others not guilty. It was not a valid finding to say that the defendants were guilty of several conspiracies, when the Counts out, show the defendants are guilty of several conspiracies, when the Counts out, show the defendants are guilty of several conspiracies, when the counts out, show the defendants are guilty of several conspiracies, when the counts out, show the defendants are guilty of several conspiracies, when the counts out, show the defendants are guilty of several conspiracies, when the counts out, show the several conspiracies due to the several conspiracies due to the several conspiracies due to the counts out, show the several conspiracies due to counts only charged them with one. The judges, therefore, Several pieces from the Ode for St. Cecilia's Day were then considered the findings in the first four counts were not correct sung, and a few of the best of Purcell's Rounds and Catches in law, and therefore improperly entered on the record.

The third question was, whether there was any reason to reverse the judgment, in consequence of the defect in the find-ing of the jury in some of the counts in the indictment? On this point there was a difference of opinion amongst the judges, which has placed the corn harvest out of all danger. At the which has placed the corn harvest out of all danger. At the Montreal the point there was a difference of opinion amongst the judges, and therefore he now only delivered his own humble judgement. He was of opinion, that if one or more counts on which a de-fendant was convicted were good, and some of the other counts were defective, it was not a sufficient reason to reverse the judgement on writ of error. Their lordships' question must, therefore be answered in the negative. The fourth question was, whether the plea of abatement was a sufficient reason to reverse the judgment? The judges are all of opinion that it was not; and their lordships' question must be answered in the negative. The count was not; and their lordships' question must be answered in the negative. The count of all danger. At the beginning of the week the days were cool and windy, and the inghts clouded and dewless, so that the grain could be carried on daylight to dark; and after Tucsday, a brilliant sunshine, with a pleasant breeze, swept away, at an early hour, the heavy dews of the cloudless nights In consequence of this most for-tunate change of weather, the corn fields have everywhere been cleared, and thousands of stacks of wheat and oats have been secured in the best possible condition. THE CORN MARKETS.

The fifth question was, whether the trial being continued, during the vacation, was a sufficient reason to reverse the judgment? The judges all agreed that the trial had been properly continued, and therefore they answered the question in the negative. The sixth question was, whether there was sufficient to re-verse the judgment, in consequence of the objections taken by The sixth question was, whether there was sufficient to reverse the judgment, in consequence of the objections taken by the defendants to the jury panel. The judges were of opinion that the sheriff was bound to select the jury from the jury book. He could not be held responsible if a mistake occurred; for in stance, an overseer in the country might neglect, or there might he a mistake in the sending in the jury list of a particular parish in the country. If that was held to be a valid objections taken to the stopped by one party or another. The judges were all agreed that the objections taken to the jury list were not sufficient, and this question must be answered in the negative. The seventh question, whether the objections taken to the judges were all agreed that he objections taken to the jury list were not sufficient, the judges were all agreed that he objections taken to the jury list were not sufficient. The judges were all agreed that the objections taken to the judges were all agreed the negative.
