The estimates of advances to the Dominions had not been exceeded. Referring to Russia, Mr. Bonar Law said no state had ever entirely repudiated its debts. It was almost certain that sooner or later there would be a stable government there. He believed responsible government would ultimately be established in Russia. If there were a stable government of its resources and prosperity would be impossible without financial assistance, from other countries, and financial assistance would be impossible unless previous debts were accepted by that government. Therefore he believed that the money would be recoverable sooner or later. Speaking of taxation Mr. Law said that if the war should be still in progress when the next financial year began, it would be the duty of the chancellor of the exchequer to devise additional taxation, so as to make it certain that when the war ended there would be no possibility of having to impose new taxation.
