JIMMY COON STORIES

By Dr. Warren C. Partridge.
Copyright 1917 by George Matthew Adams.

JIMMY COON WATCHES A BATTLE IN THE AIR.
You remember that the Eagle is so bold and strong, that he makes people work for him. Now, Mr. Eagle is strong enough to work for himself. But I'm sorry to say that big Mr. Eagle is rather lazy, when it comes to fishing. You know, he is called the "King of Birds."

So he takes anything he wants from anybody when he gets the chance. You see, he is a big bully among birds, and so he is a powerful Robber—like some big Kings among humans. Now, of course, Mr. Eagle knows that Mr. Fish-Hawk is one of the best fishermen in all the world. So Mr. Eagle will fool around on his powerful pinions, very high up in the air, over Mirror Pond. And all the time that Mr. Eagle is flying like a little speck high up in the sky, he keeps his eye on Mr. Fish-Hawk. And when Mr. Fish-Hawk has fished for a long time, and is very tired, and rises in the air with a big fat Pickering in his claws, then Mr. Eagle swoops like a whirlwind, to fight Mr. Fish-Hawk, and take that big fat fish for himself.

You see, it is awfully mean and selfish in Mr. Eagle. And it is the cruelty and meanness of a big bully, who thinks that because he is strong, he can crush anyone weaker than himself. Well, Mr. Eagle is always for "War," and watches Mr. Fish-Hawk; and because he is more powerful, he makes Mr. Fish-Hawk his slave, and conveys him to catch fish for him very often. Jimmy Coon was watching this battle in the sky. It was a royal fight, and Mr. Fish-Hawk made some wonderful flights in his Flying Machine to outwit Mr. Eagle.

It was wonderful to see their antics in the air. You never saw such graceful swoops, and spirals, made by any Birdmen in their very best Aeroplanes. But Mr. Fish-Hawk got tired at last. He was not as big or powerful as Mr. Eagle. And when Mr. Eagle got very near to Mr. Fish-Hawk, and plunged to finish him with his awful beak and talons, Mr. Fish-Hawk, in terror, dropped his big fish.

But warriors were high up in the air, when the fish was dropped. But Mr. Eagle was so quick and strong, that he swooped and followed that big fish in falling. And, remarkable to tell, Mr. Eagle caught the fish in his powerful talons before the big fish struck the water of Mirror Pond! And Mr. Eagle started to fly upward with his fish.

Tomorrow—Jimmy Coon Watches Big Eagle.

Mr. Fish-Hawk, in Terror, Dropped His Big Fish.

The Fresh Summer Greens

In the early summer one naturally longs for something green. Salads offer the best opportunity, perhaps, to satisfy this longing. A piece of crisp lettuce, romaine, endive or some field salad, dressed with oil and vinegar and seasoned with salt, mustard and pepper, is satisfying and one easily does with less meat and heavier foods. Then, too, the system is obtaining in this way the needed tonic which nature offers in a pleasing form, and less "spring medicine" is required. These foods clear the skin and brighten the eyes. Eat plenty of them now and can dry all that you can for next winter's use.

The following recipes offer suggestions for using these vegetables hot, sometimes to be served as an accompaniment to meat, and sometimes as a main dish for luncheon or supper.

A great deal depends upon good seasoning and an attractive serving. Also, the same vegetable, served in a different way, prevents the family from becoming tired of it.

Creamed Bermuda Onions.
Select Bermuda onions of uniform size. Boil, until tender, in salted water. Drain, place one onion on a saucer, and cover with a white sauce to which grated cheese has been added, the proportion being half a cup of grated cheese to one cup of sauce. Sprinkle the onions with finely cut parsley.

Scalloped Leeks and Potatoes.
Wash, pare and thinly slice four medium-sized potatoes; cook in boiling water for five minutes; drain. Cut two bunches of leeks into small pieces, using some of the green stalks. Make a thin white sauce, using two tablespoonfuls of fat, two tablespoonfuls of flour, one teaspoonful of salt and half a cup of milk. When the sauce has thickened add half a cupful of cut small pieces. In a greased dish put a layer of potatoes, then a layer of leeks and a layer of sauce. Repeat, cover with sauce and buttered crumbs. Bake for half an hour.

Endive.
There are two kinds of endive: that which has the leaves held into a compact, heart-shaped bunch, and the kind which is more like lettuce which is not closely headed. The French housewife uses both kinds, the first in stock and the second as greens.

Braised Endive.
Endive, like celery, is excellent braised. First blanch the stalks by boiling in boiling water for two minutes. Drain from the water, place in a baking dish and cover with stock or boiling water. Cover the dish and bake in the oven until tender, which will take about one hour. For the vegetables and seasonings use two tablespoonfuls of fat or olive oil, a really spoonful of each of chopped onion, red pepper and parsley. Add two tablespoonfuls of fat or olive oil, a really spoonful of each of chopped onion, red pepper and parsley. Add two of utility. Everything has got down to the hard grind of efficiency, and the "dolls" will find themselves relegated to the realm of things forgotten or dispensed.

The elevated skirt hem and summer fur will this season be a thing of the past. We now see the funny side of hoop-skirt and powdered wig. Khaki drill, bloomers and smocks, or blue uniforms with white aprons and caps are the order of the day. The girls behind you, who leave some girls behind you, must leave furs and frills for off-duty variety. "Oh, it is that awful dress she has on; she made it herself." Number three: "Well, at her age and with her figure, she can't afford to take a chance. She should go to the best dressmaker in the city." And then the machine-gun gets into action, and there is a perfect storm of remarks until, well, until they get tired or run out of ammunition. Perhaps some one tells now the poor dear is trying to be economical, and another declares if she had a husband as mean as that she would get a divorce. But did you ever notice how the chatter begins and how noded good-bye to everyone in general, she gave a parting shot: "Now don't say nasty things about me when I'm gone." She said it in perfect good-nature, but she is one of the best minded, fun-loving dispositions, who will not let herself be bothered by the least of the world's troubles. But she is also a keen observer, and knows the usual chatter that goes on when you leave some girls behind you, about the dear departed is the proper course of action, why let them be kind words, and when it is your turn to leave early thus will you be done by as you did unto others.

far it will travel before some one has the courage to change the subject. Let us change the custom altogether, and if an awful hush occurs when some poor soul must leave before the others, about the dear departed is the proper course of action, why let them be kind words, and when it is your turn to leave early thus will you be done by as you did unto others.

Ans.—Somebody also was asking for these formulas the other day, Emma, and as I did not have them I appealed to readers to supply the same. So far I have not received any copies of the instructions, but I hope to do so before long. Is it possible for anyone to oblige this youthful reader?

Will Not Be Offended.
Dear Miss Grey—I noticed in your column of last Saturday's Advertiser that there was a letter waiting for Forget-Me-Not. Evidently this letter must have been waiting for some time, but I did not see any notice of it before, probably because I have not had much time to read the papers. However, I am sending my address, and I hope that you will send the letter forthwith. Do not suppose that the first Forget-Me-Not will forgive me for using her name. It was done quite unintentionally, I assure you, and this time I will sign myself.

THE SECOND FORGET-ME-NOT.
Ans.—The letter has been mailed with pleasure. I am sure the first Forget-Me-Not will not be offended. She should write more often, and then our new readers would not appropriate her pen name.
