A walnut log taken from the sand and muck of the Arkansas river, two miles below Port Gibson, Ok. is valued at $1580 by its finder, G. L. Dunn, a professional timber hunter. It will be sent to Hamburg, Ger. The tree was so large that it was cut into four logs, the largest measuring more than five feet in diameter and scaling about 2,090 feet. One limb was two feet in diameter. Several men worked three or four days excavating the tree, and its recovery from the river cost $150.

WANTED—Position as governess, companion, managing housekeeper or seamstress. Prefer advanced pupils. Experienced as private school teacher. Can the latest edition of the most unabridged dictionary. The pupils tried to find out by consulting books of statistics, librarians, college professors, but failed. At an indignation meeting it was decided that the only way to answer the question was to count the words, and this the pupils decided not to do. The teacher admits he does not know the exact number himself, but says that several authorities give it at about 400,000.
