The sun was just setting, he was within a couple of hundred yards of his home, and in his drunken way was happily singing a stanza of a comic song, when he was startled by a piercing scream; and looking up he was horrified to see the face of his wife disappearing down the old-fashioned well in the back yard. Now, he was as sober as ever man was whose lips a drop of anything intoxicating had never passed; and a thousand harrowing thoughts ran tumultuously through his mind, as he put lash and heel to his steed and sped like the wind to the rescue of her whom he had sworn to love, cherish and protect. He remembered how he had neglected her; how he had been drinking she had concluded to sever band, by committing suicide.
