

ATTEMPTED ASSAULT ON A KINGSTON POLICEMAN AT CAPE VINCENT.

A gentleman from the "Pierpont," who was a passenger on that steamer, on Monday last, happened to be on the pier at Cape Vincent on his way home from an official trip to one of the adjacent American towns. It was necessary for him to do so to take the steamer Pierpont for Kingston on the afternoon trip; and while waiting for the boat the fact became known to George Briggs and his gang who immediately surrounded him, and armed with bludgeons, made preparations for an assault. A friendly American, who had not lost all his humanity by the hardening process of the war, put Sergeant Stacey on his guard, and it was so arranged that the boat should not be delayed by the assault. The crowd of rowdies, however, were at the dock bludgeoned and all ready for the attack. It is said that the gang were very indignant at the manner in which Sergeant Stacey slipped through their fingers; and not daring to enter the boat after he was safe in the cabin, they vented their indignation in any amount of cursing and swearing on the dock as the steamer left.
