The Pride of Llewellyn

And so saying, she drew on her gloves and set out on her long walk to the newspaper offices.

Released from the paralyzing influence of Mrs. Llewellyn's treatment, the mind of Gladys recovered all that natural strength and elasticity that misfortune had no power to crush and destroy. She saw what she ought to do, and she acted with promptitude. She went to the office of the principal morning paper and inserted two advertisements. The first ran thus:

"Lieutenant Arthur Powis—If these lines should reach your eyes, you may hear good news by addressing a note to G. P., Post Office till called for."

The second advertisement set forth that:

"A lady, well qualified to teach the common and higher branches of an English education with the French and German languages, vocal and instrumental music, and drawing and painting would be happy to meet with an engagement as governess in a private family or as assistant teacher in a school. A letter addressed to G. P., Post Office till called for will meet with prompt attention."

CHAPTER XX.
Entrapped

On the Saturday of the second week Gladys started for the post office with her lately costumed hopes somewhat reduced by continual disappointment yet consoling herself with the reflection that, come what, come woe, she was free!

When she got to the post office, and asked the usual question, however, the smiling clerk, who had grown familiar with the pretty, eager, childish face of the daily visitor, put three letters into her hands! All had come at once. It never rains but it pours, you know!

Gladys hastily seized them! She could not wait until she had left home, or even until she had left the post-office. She hurried up into a corner of the entrance hall; and she tore open the letters one after the other and hastily glanced over them. The first thing that her first hope being that they might contain news of Arthur.

No, but they did not! They were all answers to the governess advertisement. And Gladys with a sigh of disappointment thrust them all into her pocket and hurried home, that she might read them there at her leisure.

When she entered the cottage, Miss Polly met her as usual.

"Come in, honey. It's chocolate and broiled chicken this time! I won't vex you by asking you if you've got any letters, because I know it isn't no use," said the old lady, drawing her guest into the cozy room.

"Oh, but I've got the letters of last Miss Polly!" said Gladys as, all glowing red from the frosty air without, she sat down before the fire, and began to draw off her gloves, while Miss Milly took off her bonnet.

These poor childless old ladies lavished all their unclaimed maternal love upon this bright young creature, who had sought their protection.

"Letters, honey?" exclaimed the three sisters simultaneously and eagerly as if the same had been their own.

"Yes, indeed," said Gladys, gayly, "three letters! all offering me situations."

"Ah—hal people is coming to their senses, is they?" said Miss Polly, exultingly.

"Well, now, take your chocolate and chicken, honey, and then you may read them to us," said Miss Milly, considerably.

Gladys obeyed them as she almost always did with a sort of filial affection and reverence. And when she had eaten and was satisfied she took the three letters from her pocket and put them on the table, and then she took up the first that came to hand and opened and read it.

It proved to be a letter from a South Carolina planter who described himself as a widower aged thirty-five with one little daughter aged four years, and who wished a personal interview with the advertiser, and promised—should the interview prove to be mutually agreeable—the most liberal salary, on condition that the lady would take charge of his house and of the education of his little daughter. He required no references and gave none.

The second letter was of later date, and had come a shorter distance. It proved to be from a maiden lady in Maryland, who had three orphan nieces left to her guardianship, and who wished to procure for them an accomplished teacher, to whom she would be willing to pay a very large salary. But she required the most unquestionable testimonials as to the character and ability of the advertiser.

Gladys opened the third letter. This one proved to be from Dranesville, a village within a few miles of Washington on the south side of the Potomac; and it was dated only on the preceding day.

"It is singular," said Gladys, as she read the date, "that these three letters, each coming from a different point, and bearing a different date, should have reached me all at once. But such things will happen so sometimes, I know."

"Read it honey," said Miss Polly.

Gladys complied.

The letter purported to be from a wealthy widow lady living on a plantation in the neighborhood of Dranesville, and having four little girls between the ages of seven and twelve years, who she wished to educate at home, and for whom she was anxious to engage a competent governess. As the advertiser appeared to meet her views she would be pleased to conclude an engagement with her. She would offer her three hundred dollars a year for the first year's salary, and increase the sum as her daughters advanced toward the higher branches of their education. If these terms would suit the advertiser, the latter would please direct a letter to the corresponsent saying at what time it would suit her to come to Dranesville, so the corresponsent might send a carriage to the village to meet the advertiser and bring

SAGE TEA KEEPS YOUR HAIR DARK

When Mixed with Sulphur It Brings Back Its Beautiful Lustre at Once.

Gray hair, however handsome, denotes advancing age. We all know the advantages of a youthful appearance. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns gray and looks streaked, just a few applications of Sage Tea and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundred-fold.

Don't stay gray! Look young! Either prepare the recipe at home or get from any drug store a bottle of "Wyle's Sage and Sulphur Compound," which is merely the old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients. Thousands of folks recommend this ready-to-use preparation, because it darkens the hair beautifully, besides, no one can possibly tell, as it darkens so naturally and evenly. You moisten a sponge or soft brush with it, drawing this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, its natural color is restored and it becomes thick, glossy and lustrous, and you appear years younger.

Written to her destination. The letter was written upon deep black-bordered paper, and signed Elizabeth Fairbridge.

Gladys pondered over this letter, holding it in her hand.

FOUR ORPHANS ON LONG JOURNEY

Quebec, Dec. 17.—Four children, the eldest (aged eleven) in charge, were the feature of interest on a train that passed here eastbound. The four children came alone all the way from Saskatoon and reached Portland on Sunday, embarking on Monday for Scotland, where they will hereafter make their home with their grandmother.

There are two girls and two boys in the party, their ages being, eleven, nine, seven and five years, and their father and mother are dead.

Queen Victoria of Spain has a considerable knowledge of dramatic technique and once wrote a very successful little play in French for the members of the Spanish Court at San Sebastian.
