

By Stewart Edward White

Author of "The Blazed Trail," "The Mountains," etc.

THE FOREST

THIS is an informal guide for the traveler in the forest; the man who starts out on a journey through the woodland or for a vacation wants to know a thousand things that only a man who has been there himself many times can tell him. Mr. White was born in the forest country, and roamed the woods all his youth and continues to wander them now in manhood. All the tricks of forest travel he knows, and in this book he makes them plain to the layman. It explains the equipment (what not to take especially), selecting the camp site, the dividing of labor among the party, the cooking, and a multitude of other things essential to be informed of accurately before one sets out. The whole is presented in the form of a narrative, and is written in a spontaneous, intimate vein that breathes in every line the love of nature which has already made Mr. White famous through such woodland fiction as "The Blazed Trail," "The Silent Places," "Conjuror's House," etc. The book is an unusual combination of information and entertainment.

Illustrated by Thomas Fogarty

Net, $1.50

The McClure Company