Impromptu. THE FLOWER AND THE STAR.

A little flower, by human eve. Unnoticed, on the ground, Was gazing in the far blue sky As evening closid around

Out came the stars, like iewels cas In handful- .'er the sky, But one-a love one, charm'd the flower, With beauty born on high.

The love-sick flower so sad and lone In earthiv darkness veil'd. Unclos'd its crimson petals wide, And thus the planet hail'd :

Oh my sick heart is sad. fair star The night of earth is cold-I yearn to love some glorious thing Like thee, pale star, of old !"

Poor little flower ! the star shone on Unmindful of the cry-The flower shrank back to earth again In solitude to die.

And was the star so far away It could not hear the sound ?-Or was it cold to leaf and flower That deck'd such shadowy ground

Ah, no ! the star had heard it well-It sent a dew-drop fair. And fill'd the flower's fragrant cell Itself to image there

( the leave ' in this world of sin Look on me from shove, So that my darken'd soul within May mirror back thy love.

Shed down thy grace upon my heart Like heavenly dew-drops fair-So when the night is darkest round I'll find thy image there. WMcK. Guysborough, June 29.
