

MY PEGGY IS A YOUNG THING

MY Peggy is a young thing. Just enter'd in her teens, Fair as the day, and sweet as May, Fair as the day, and always gay. My Peggy is a young thing, And I'm not very auld, Yet well I like to meet her at The wauking of the fauld.

My Peggy speaks sae sweetiy, Whene'er we meet alane. I wish nae mair to lay my care, I wish hae mair of a' that's rare. My Peggy speaks sae sweetly, To a' the lave I'm cauld: But she gars a' my spirits glow, At wauking of the fauld.

My Peggy smiles sae kindly. Whene'er I whisper love, That I look down on a' the town. That I look down upon a crown. My Peggy smiles sae kindly, It makes me blyth and bauld And nothing gies me sic delight As wauking of the fauld.

My Peggy sings sae saftly, When on my pipe I play. By a' the rest it is confest,-By a' the rest, that she sings best, My Peggy sings sae saftly, And in her sangs are tauld. With Innocence, the wale o' sense,

FRIENDLY ADVICE

ET not the sun in Capricorn go down upon thy wrath, but write thy wrongs in water, draw the curtain of night upon injuries, shut them up in the tower of oblivion, and let them be as though they had not been. Forgive thine enemies totally, without any reserve of hope that however God will revenge thee.

Be substantially great in thyself, and more than thou appearest unto others; and let the world be deceived in thee, as they are in the lights of heaven. Think not that mankind liveth but for a few; and that the rest are born but to serve the ambition of those who make but flies of men, and wildernesses of whole nations. Swell not into vehement actions, which embroil and confound the earth, but be one of those violent ones that force the kingdom of heaven. If thou must needs rule, be Zeno's king, and enjoy that empire which every man gives himself: certainly the iterated injunctions of Christ unto humility, meekness, patience, and that despised train of virtues, cannot but make pathetical impression upon those who have well considered the affairs of all ages; wherein pride, ambition, and vain-glory, have led up to the worst of actions, whereunto confusions, tragedies, and acts, denying all religion, do owe their originals. Rest not in an ovation, but a triumph over thy passions. Chain up the unruly legion of thy breast; behold thy trophies within thee, not without thee. Lead thine own captivity captive, and be Cæsar unto that once she had expected to call thyself.

Give no quarter unto those vices that are of thine inward family, and, flitting from room to room and looked having a root in thy temper, plead a right about her. The Empty House

By Panale Barnett Lineky

The little brown car had swung with a soft humming sound down the smooth road, and its sole occupant was sitting with her hands in her lap, looking dreamily out at the landscape and the rows of houses that they passed. Many a one passing by on the sidewalk might have envied the lovely young woman who sat there, so slender and aristocratic, in the little brown car, but she herself was not even conscious of the looks, whether envious or admiring, that were cast in her direc-

If, as the poets my, "the eyes are mirrors of the soul," then it was very apparent that Elaine Hargreve was set happy, for the md. far-way expression on her face told its own story. As the machine turned the corner of the street, however, the began to take more interest in her surroundings, and she watched carefully the bounes she passed.

Suddenly she leaned forward and poke to the chauffeur. "Stop, Jacques," she commanded sharply, "at the house "To Let." The brakes ground sharply, and Elaine stepped out at once. looked again and drew in her breath quickly. A wave of crimson flooded her face. The chauffeur wondered at the sudden order, for they were already late for dinner, and he did not think that his mistress could possibly want to look at this empty house.

The glory of a perfect spring day was over all the out-of-doors. It seemed a day to tempt anyone to remain in the open, and drink in to the full the beauties of bountiful nature, but evidently this did not attract the girl, for she mounted the steps of the house

She looked around at Jacques after she had rung the bell. "Wait till I come out," she said.

A slevenly-looking woman suddenly appeared in response to her ring. She was as dusty looking, somehow, as the house was, and quite as dejected looking; but Elaine scarcely saw her as she spoke: "I want to see the house," said the girl. "I suppose I can go in?" "Well, it's gettin' pretty late, mum.

"You can give me your candle," said

The front door was opened and Elaine went through the passage and glided upstairs like a ghost, the woman promptly returning to the lower regions, whence she had come. Lighting the dirty candle from a gas jet ourning in the passageway. Elaine went from one room to another with quick, nervous haste. Her face was quite colorless, but her eyes burned with a feverish light that made her seem very different from the brilliant lady of fashion that most people knew as Elaine Hargrave. Here she was but a girl; and face to face with memory, memory that was still alive after three years of bitter struggle—the struggle of trying to forget.

For today was the third anniversary of what was to have been Elaine Hargrave's wedding day, but that wedding never took place; and on the third anniversary of "what might have been," as Elaine expressed it herself, and just home from travels that had taken her into the faraway corners of the world, the girl had become possessed with the desire to see the place

'home." She stopped for a moment in her man she loved after their bitter quarcome to respect all the more the man who would not bow down to them.

And how empty was her heart as well! She could see him plainty, if she but shut her eyes for a moment, as he good looks, all the more so because he had not belonged to her "set," but had make it not thy expectation. Reckon not come to the city unknown, and had worked up to an enviable position. She could almost hear again his earnest voice as he remonstrated with her on

She recalled now how she had flung From Letter to a Friend, by SIR THOMAS she had known even then that he was right, but some perverse spirit seemed (Born October 19, 1605; died October to urge her not to give in; how she had refused to do what he saked of her, telling her "that she would live her life without him, and that she realized new that it was a mistake to expect an outsider—a plebelan—to un-derstand the ways of her kind of people." Even now, after three years, Elaine still winced as she thought of those hasty words of hers. How she must have hurt him-and all the time she was hurting herself as well; and he had let her go on without a word of protest, in the end gravely agreeing with her, and saying that he would never ask her to come back again, And e hadn't. And they never met nor

Elaine's eyes were opened now, but of course it was far too late to give in and acknowledge herself in the wrong. Three years of time had rolled between them, the bar of passionate words on either side keeping them apart

She started once more on her pilgrimage through the rooms. First the dining room, with the familiar pa-per, which she herself had selected. He had not been so well-off them, and had insisted upon living in the style that his own carnings would entitle them to—but he had worked hard to give her as many as possible of the luxuries that she had been accus-

"So small a thing to mean so large a loss," murmured the girl to herself She had read those words somewhere and now they came into her mind. She stood for a time looking out through the clouded windows. Great tears welled up in her eyes and poured down over her face—as if the barriers were memory to flow in and engulf her.

She had never allowed herself to think in this way before, but the spirit of love seemed to have come back to the dusty little room from which he had flown three years before. For her time passed unheeded.

Darkness fell. Outside, James felt very cross. The idea of anyone spendng so much time looking at an empty house! He folded his arms and went half asleep. Down in the basement, the care-taker, having finished her supper, came up, and, forgetting all about her visitor, or, thinking that she had surely gone away long ago, closed the door and went home.

And Elaine dreamed on-for how ong, she knew not. But suddenly she awoke to reality with a start, to notice that it had grown very dark outside, and that there were footsteps coming through the hall. Then came the sound of a voice that seemed familiar.

"Hold the light low there, please, I wish to see all the rooms. There, thank you; that's better."

Elaine had crept to the door, and was listening with a white face. She had a glimpse of the two men as they passed the door — one, evidently the night watchman, holding the lamp, and the other, the man she had sent away three years before.

"So he, too, has not forgotten," thought Elaine, bitterly.

She wondered if she should speakmake her presence known — but each time she tried to her courage failed her. She looked again. Yes, there he was! Standing in front of the open fireplace. Once more she peered through the open door. "How changed he was," she said to herself. "How much elder and grayer." Her face was still wet with the traces of her recent tears, but she did not even know it as she went up and tapped gently on the wall between the two rooms. He turned round suddenly with a great start. Then he came to the door and opened it wider. Blaine walked into the room. All the light from the lamp seemed to shine on the slender figure, standing there so erect and proud. The girl's face was white and strained, but her blue eyes shone like twin stars. The man started back with a little cry of unutterable astonishment.

"Elaine! Good God!" "Listen," she said softly, her hands outstretched. "Let me humble myself while I can. I need you, Richard-I want you you and the little house."

"Elaine Elaine" The man could but whisper her name, for the sudden sight of her seemed to have dazed him. "Elaine why did you come?"

Quite suddenly all the fear and pride seemed to die out of the girl's heart. "Because I loved you," she whispered softly. "Because in the old empty house I came to understand that I could never be happy without you. When I stood in the little room that we had planned together"—her voice broke—"Richard, forgive me

She was in his arms, so the words she could not speak, and his arms were around her as he murmur-ed; "It's for you to forgive me, dearest. My little girl! And I thought that you did not care!'

She clung to him, even as he held her, as he kissed lip and brow and hair. He could not let her go. He would never let her ge again. "My dearest." he whispered, "not for long will it be the Empty House."
