Haig Prepares Fresh Thrust in Flanders

British Front in France and Belgium, Aug. 21.—(By the American Press Association).—There have been intense artillery bombardments and airships on both sides have been very active. Last night the air was full of British and German planes, which bombed their way into each other's territory amidst picturesque but awesome, flashes from breaking shrapnel and long white rays from searchlights.

The French engineers have encountered considerable difficulties among the marshes into which the French have advanced on their left, but work is proceeding with marvelous rapidity.

Up to date the French have captured about twenty-five German machine guns since this offensive began on July 31, and the machine guns taken are innumerable. Some of the captured redoubts were found to be veritable nests of machine guns. One field gun, which a German artilleryman was about to blow up, was taken near Les Lilas, the gunner being shot just as he was placing the explosive.

The examination of German prisoners taken by the British continues, and out of 940 questioned more than twenty-five per cent were found to belong to the 1918 class. Non-commissioned German officers relate how they are hampered by the demoralization of the younger recruits with whom they are supplied. They say they cannot rely upon these youngsters, and similar complaints are heard about the inefficiency of the young German officers in the battle of Flanders. The demoralization of certain German regiments at Langemarck and Polygon Wood last Thursday was complete, and this was due, according to captured non-commissioned officers, to the preponderance of 18 year old youths in the ranks.

The 261st and 202nd regiments of the 79th Division fled to the rear at Langemarck, and many were killed by the British artillery as they ran. Both these regiments were ordered to counter-attack later, but could not because they were so exhausted and nerve-racked.

The tanks cleared the whole territory desired and then trundled back home. They suffered no damage and the casualties for the operation totalled fifteen. This has been the most striking incident of the latest fighting along this front.

The tanks scored another triumph in the capture of important German positions yesterday morning in the neighborhood of the Ypres-Poelcapelle road, north of St. Julien. It was a tank show almost from start to finish, and the infantry in this case played the part of supernumeraries in support of the leading actors, while large numbers of the enemy troops added a final melodramatic touch by surrendering abjectly or fleeing as the tanks approached.

As recorded in the official communication, the British captured German defenses along a mile to a length of 500 yards. Among the trophies obtained were the famous Triangle, Hibau and Cocheret Farms, the sites of exceedingly strong concrete and steel machine-gun redoubts which menaced the infantry advance.

It was dawn when the tanks lined up and waited for the signal to "go over the top." The British artillery rendered no less of a chivalry to the tanks than to the infantry in the past, and a preliminary stream of shells into the German lines, then directed at a horizontal band of the front, which opened a target for the tanks to hit. The great success which had followed out from one of Hans Anderson's conceptions into the new morning light, that showed the British tanks in the "Cockpit of Europe" behind them, and the infantry ready to do the clearing up of the remaining enemy after the tanks had finished their part. But there was little for the infantry to do, as the tanks had done the heavy work, and the care for the prisoners as the tanks progressed.

There was hard fighting at several positions, such as the three redoubts mentioned, but it was always brief. The tanks wheeled into position and opened a heavy fire on the fortifications, and the Germans were either killed or surrendered. The German casualties were heavy. Great numbers of Germans were seen fleeing, terror-stricken, as the tanks appeared in the distance, and a considerable number were ordered to surrender without offering resistance.
