NATURE SPARES

The Stricken Rose From Grief.

What a fortunate provision of nature it is, that deprives the roses of mental suffering; for how poignant would be its grief to discover, in the height of its blooming glory, that a canker fed at its heart, and that its beauty and fragrance were doomed forever. Nature always spares the suffering; she is a veritable store-house of pleasing rewards, for those who seek her aid. In the years gone by falling hair and grayness have cast a gloom over the lives of thousands of young women, but thanks to the investigations of scientists the true cause of hair destruction is now known to be a germ or parasite that burrows into the hair follicles. Newbro's Herculicide absolutely destroys this germ, thus permitting the hair to grow as nature intended. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c. in stamps for sample to The Herculicide Co., Detroit, Mich.

The other glanced at the photograph with an incredulous sneer. "No, it is not a plant, and I'm not going to palm off a pack of lies on you. But I tell you what I am going to do. I am going to make a bargain with you. Wait. Better not, cut in yet a while, for it strikes me that when you've heard what I've got to say you'll be sorry for cutting up rough. Now, Mr. Berton, don't think me impertinent if I ask you a question. Is it a fact that you want to marry the beautiful young lady up at the Court there?"

Guilford Berton started, and the color rushed to his face, but he remained silent.

"Silence gives consent. I give you credit for the best of taste. I've seen a great many of the fair sex in both hemispheres, and I say—he struck the table with his powerful fist—"that that young lady towers above them all—as—as—a palm tree towers above a lilac bush! Why, sir, if I were as young and good-looking as you are, I should be as much in love with her as you are. From all I hear there isn't a young man within twenty miles who wouldn't give all he was worth, and ten years of his life to boot to lead her to the altar."

Berton rose, as if unable to control himself, but Furlong coolly waved to him.

"Sit down, Mr. Berton, I meant no offence. I wouldn't speak a disrespectful word of her—ay, and what's more I'd knock down any man that offered to do so in my presence. Sit down and keep your temper. You'll want all your wits presently."

There was something, a subtle significance in his tone which carried weight, and Guilford Berton sank in to the chair again.

"That's right. And now about this bargain I spoke of. Suppose, Mr. Berton, I possess some information which would help you in your suit with that young lady. Suppose I could tell you something, a secret worth its weight in gold to you, something that would make your suit straight and plain, and insure your getting that young lady for your wife—what would you say?" and he leaned forward and looked him straight between the eyes.

Berton smiled incredulously.

"I should say I utterly refuse to believe a word you say," he said, "and if you knew me better, you would know that I am the last man to make terms with a ruffianly burglar. Tell your story, whatever it may be, to the police; I fancy you will find them as incredulous as I am."

"Good. You've said what you ought to say, and you've said it very well. I give you all credit for your courage. But I'll give you another chance, and I'll give you another chance, and I'll give you another chance, if you don't come to my terms I shall, very reluctantly, have to tie you in that chair and gag you while I get clear off. Come, you're dying to ask me what I mean. Just ask me a few questions. For instance, what do I find in the photograph of this lady to interest and startle me so much?"

"I shall ask you nothing. I want to hear no more from you."

"Then I'll ask you a few questions. First of all, do you know this? I don't ask you how you came by it. Perhaps the young lady gave it to you, or you found it or perhaps you stole it."

Guilford Berton's face flamed, but he swallowed his rage and answered quietly enough; Furlong had spoken the truth, and he was dying to hear what the man had to say.

"You don't deserve an answer," he said.

"But you'll humor me, eh? Just so. Well?"

"It is the portrait of the late Countess of Arrowsdale's companion," said Guilford Berton, slowly, and almost sullenly.

"And her name was Catharine. It's written here on the card, and her surname was Hayes. And when the countess left her husband, the Earl, her maid, this Catharine Hayes, went with her?"

"She did."

"Is she dead?" asked Furlong, very grimly.

"The countess? Yes."

"This woman, the maid, this Catharine?" said Furlong.

"Yes, she is dead, too."

"Dear, dear!" muttered Furlong. "Tell me, now, did she live with her mistress till the countess died?"

"She did."

"And the young lady, Lady Norah, was left in her charge, I suppose?" asked Furlong.

"That is so. Why do you ask?"

"What interest?"

"I ask because I didn't know," replied Furlong. "I know a great deal about her."

He gazed at the portrait some moments, lost in thought, then he got up and laid it on the table.

"Come and take a good look at it," he said.

Berton hesitated a moment, half suspicious that it was a trap to get him away from his post in front of the door, but Furlong cast a glance of contempt at him.

"What, can't you see I'm in earnest?" he said, sternly.

"Do you see nothing? Look hard! Doing nothing strikes you?"

"I do not understand you. I see nothing."

"Shut it—shut the door close."

"You know that there is no one in the house but my servant, an old woman, deaf and dumb, or you would not have trifled with me as you have done," he said.

"Shut the door all the same, for what I've got to say even the deaf and dumb might have ears and tongue to hear and tell. Shut the door, I say."

"There," he said, "see you satisfied?"

Furlong beckoned to him to come nearer, and, laying his heavy hand upon the shoulder of the other, whispered a few words in his ear.

The Wornout Nerves, The Weak Heart, The Tired Brain, The Wasted Strength.

What a multitude of women there are who feel that these words exactly suit their case. From early morn until late at night they have been on the go, year in and year out, attending to the daily household duties, looking after the wants of her children and spending the rest of her time attending to social and church work. Is it any wonder then that sooner or later there comes a general collapse? The action of the heart becomes weak and palpitating, the nerves become unstrung, the brain feels in a whirl half the time and the usual force of vitality is lacking.

It is at this time a woman should look after herself. If she does not, serious female disorders may set in and often cause weary months and years of helplessness and miserable suffering. What she wants is something to build up her system. For this purpose there is nothing so equal

MILBURN'S HEART AND NERVE PILLS

They are the women's friend in every sense of the word.

They will strengthen the weak heart, tone up the shaky, starved nerves, make the brain clear, and restore the lost vitality.

Mrs. George Lohnes, Stanley Section, N.S., writes: "I was greatly troubled with weak and dizzy spells and was so run down I could not attend to my household duties. I bought two boxes of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills and after taking them I found that my trouble had all passed away. I am now strong and healthy again."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 80 cents per box or 3 for $1.25. If your dealer does not handle them, send direct to The Milburn Co., Ltd., Toronto, Ont.

Berton started, and turned a white face of amazement and unbelief upon him.

"What!" he exclaimed. "Pshaw! It's impossible!"

"It's not only possible, but it's true!" retorted Furlong, with grim earnestness. "Sit down and listen to me."

As Berton listened drops of sweat came out upon his forehead, and his face changed from red to white.

"If, if this is true—if I can believe it!"

"It is gospel!" retorted Furlong, laconically. "And you do believe it. I can see it by your face, man."

"Prove it—give me proofs," dropped from the white lips.

"Proofs? Yes, conclusive, irrefutable ones. Proof how you know for any court of law in the land. An exclamation difficult to describe burst from Berton, and he rose and paced the room, his face working, his hands clasped tightly behind his back.

Furlong sat himself on the table and watched him coolly.

Suddenly he stopped before the sideboard, and took out the brandy decanter.

"Oh, that's it!" muttered Furlong to himself; then aloud:

"Here, steady! Not too much of that! A glass apiece. You want to keep your wits, don't you? Well, if you're going to work this properly, and you are, you know."

Berton poured out a couple of glasses with a shaky hand, and with an uneasy air.

"When—when will you let me have the proofs?" Meanwhile he kept your mouth shut. Oh, yes, you can do that I dare say. And now, what do you say to our bargain?"

"You want to know how much—"

"No," he said quietly. "I ask nothing, I'm not sure I'll take anything. But, we'll see. It strikes me I'm the honestest man of the two, Mr. Berton. I bargained for my liberty and your silence about this little escapade of mine. Well, you shall give me a hundred or two to take me out of the country, when you've done with me, and we'll cry quits."

Berton held out his hand, and Furlong took it, but with an utter absence of alacrity or effusiveness.

"Open the door," he said.

Berton opened it, and with a nod and a quiet "In three days—say Friday," this singular specimen of "the genius" burglar went out.
