them and the mass of their divisions are in better condition than those of the enemy.

On the other hand, Foch is in no position to let loose a general offensive, such as the Germans have been indulging in. Should he undertake this and fail, the Germans would be able to pass to the offensive again with far better chances of success than they now have. As far as one can see, the waiting game, with certain clear modifications, remains the best game for the Allied commander-inchef. His numbers are growing, he has mastered the new German method of attack, he has pulled down both the strength and the confidence of his fees enormously, and he is in a position to see it through, whatever the man of the man is a position to let loose a general offensive again position to let loose a general offensive, sin an interview given upon their return to London, said that they were most impressed by the wonderful spirit of the men. THE WAR TODAY.

The Germans are attempting to bring their retreat from the Soissons. Rheims salient to a stop, and as a result the fighting yesterday was of a suit the fighting yesterday was of a continued to make gains despite the ferce opposition of the enemy, but they were slight in comparison with advances of preceding days.

We should not be disappointed if our rate of advance greatly slackens from now on. The enemy has succeeded in so altering the shape of his position of wards and may reasons he may desire that such posses the initiative as he did from now on. But if Ludendorff attacks now he must attack the British, since the armies of the Crown Prince, fighting disastrously betwees the Argonne and Solssons, are in no condition to undertake an offensive. Their supplies have been exhausted, their transport disorganized and their reserves consumed in the recent unsuccessful battle and subsequent retreat. It is one thing to draw a great army out of a bad hole skilffully, and another to throw this army into an old munitions and transport was not so important; it is well nigh inconceived able under existing conditions.

If Ludendorff elects to strike the British, however, he can employ little more than twenty-five divisions of reserves, so, great has been the consumption of shock troops in recent months.
